SEC. 701. PHARMACY BENEFITS PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Chapter 55 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 1074f the following new section:

"§ 1074g. Pharmacy benefits program

"(a) PHARMACY BENEFITS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense, after consulting with the other administering Secretaries, shall establish an effective, efficient, integrated pharmacy benefits program under this chapter (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'pharmacy benefits program').

"(2)(A) The pharmacy benefits program shall include a uniform formulary of pharmaceutical agents, which shall assure the availability of pharmaceutical agents in the complete range of therapeutic classes. The selection for inclusion on the uniform formulary of particular pharmaceutical agents in each therapeutic class shall be based on the relative clinical and cost effectiveness of the agents in such class.

"(B) In considering the relative clinical effectiveness of agents under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall presume inclusion in a therapeutic class of a pharmaceutical agent, unless the Pharmacy and Therapeutics Committee established under subsection (b) finds that a pharmaceutical agent does not have a significant, clinically meaningful therapeutic advantage in terms of safety, effectiveness, or clinical outcome over the other drugs included on the uniform formulary.

"(C) In considering the relative cost effectiveness of agents under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall rely on the evaluation by the Pharmacy and Therapeutics Committee of the costs of agents in a therapeutic class in relation to the safety, effectiveness, and clinical outcomes of such agents.

"(D) The Secretary shall establish procedures for the selection of particular pharmaceutical agents for the uniform formulary. Such procedures shall be established so as best to accomplish, in the judgment of the Secretary, the objectives set forth in paragraph (1). No pharmaceutical agent may be excluded from the uniform formulary except upon the recommendation of the Pharmacy and Therapeutics Committee. The Secretary shall begin to implement the uniform formulary not later than October 1, 2000.

"(E) Pharmaceutical agents included on the uniform formulary shall be available to eligible covered beneficiaries through—

"(i) facilities of the uniformed services, consistent with the scope of health care services offered in such facilities;

"(ii) retail pharmacies designated or eligible under the TRICARE program or the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services to provide pharmaceutical agents to covered beneficiaries; or

"(iii) the national mail-order pharmacy program.

"(3) The pharmacy benefits program shall assure the availability of clinically appropriate pharmaceutical agents to members of the armed forces, including, where appropriate, agents not included on the uniform formulary described in paragraph (2).

"(4) The pharmacy benefits program may provide that prior authorization be required for certain pharmaceutical agents to assure that the use of such agents is clinically appropriate.

"(5) The pharmacy benefits program shall assure the availability to eligible covered beneficiaries of pharmaceutical agents not included on the uniform formulary. Such pharmaceutical agents shall be available through at least one of the means described in paragraph (2)(E) under terms and conditions that may include cost sharing by the eligible covered beneficiary in addition to any such cost sharing applicable to agents on the uniform formulary.

"(6) The Secretary, as part of the regulations established under subsection (g), may establish cost sharing requirements (which may be established as a percentage or fixed dollar amount) under the pharmacy benefits program for generic, formulary, and nonformulary agents. For nonformulary agents, cost sharing shall be consistent with common industry practice and not in excess of amounts generally comparable to 20 percent for beneficiaries covered by section 1079 of this title or 25 percent for beneficiaries covered by section 1086 of this title.

"(7) The Secretary shall establish procedures for eligible covered beneficiaries to receive pharmaceutical agents not included on the uniform formulary, but, considered to be clinically necessary. Such procedures shall include peer review procedures under which the Secretary may determine that there is a clinical justification for the use of a pharmaceutical agent that is not on the uniform formulary, in which case the pharmaceutical agent shall be provided under the same terms and conditions as an agent on the uniform formulary. Such procedures shall also include an expeditious appeals process for an eligible covered beneficiary, or a network or uniformed provider on behalf of the beneficiary, to establish clinical justification for the use of a pharmaceutical agent that is not on the uniform formulary.

"(8) In carrying out this subsection, the Secretary shall ensure that an eligible covered beneficiary may continue to receive coverage for any maintenance pharmaceutical that is not on the uniform formulary and that was prescribed for the beneficiary before the date of the enactment of this section and stabilized the medical condition of the beneficiary.

"(b) ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall, in consultation with the Secretaries of the military departments, establish a Pharmacy and Therapeutics Committee for the purpose of developing the uniform formulary of pharmaceutical agents required by subsection (a), reviewing such formulary on a periodic basis, and making additional recommendations regarding the formulary as the committee determines necessary and appropriate. The committee shall include representatives of pharmacies of the uniformed services facilities, contractors responsible for the TRICARE retail pharmacy program, contractors responsible for the national mail-order pharmacy program, providers in facilities of the uniformed services, and TRICARE network providers. Committee members shall have expertise in treating the medical needs of the populations served through such entities and in the range of pharmaceutical and biological medicines available for treating such populations. The committee shall function under procedures established by the Secretary under the regulations required by subsection (g).

"(2) Not later than 90 days after the establishment of the Pharmacy and Therapeutics Committee by the Secretary, the committee shall convene to design a proposed uniform formulary for submission to the Secretary. After such 90-day period, the committee shall meet at least quarterly and shall, during meetings, consider for inclusion on the uniform formulary under the standards established in subsection (a) any drugs newly approved by the Food and Drug Administration.

"(c) ADVISORY PANEL.—(1) Concurrent with the establishment of the Pharmacy and Therapeutics Committee under subsection (b), the Secretary shall establish a Uniform Formulary Beneficiary Advisory Panel to review and comment on the development of the uniform formulary. The Secretary shall consider the comments of the panel before implementing the uniform formulary or implementing changes to the uniform formulary.

"(2) The Secretary shall determine the size and membership of the panel established under paragraph (1), which shall include members that represent nongovernmental organizations and associations that represent the views and interests of a large number of eligible covered beneficiaries.

"(d) PROCEDURES.—(1) In the operation of the pharmacy benefits program under subsection (a), the Secretary of Defense shall assure through management and new contractual arrangements that financial resources are aligned such that the cost of prescriptions is borne by the organization that is financially responsible for the health care of the eligible covered beneficiary.

"(2) Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this section, the Secretary shall utilize a modification to the bid price adjustment methodology in the current managed care support contracts to ensure equitable and timely reimbursement to the TRICARE managed care support contractors for pharmaceutical products delivered in the nonmilitary environments. The methodology shall take into account the "at-risk" nature of the contracts as well as managed care support contractor pharmacy costs attributable to changes to pharmacy service or formulary management at military medical treatment facilities, and other military activities and policies that affect costs of pharmacy benefits provided through the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services. The methodology shall also account for military treatment facility costs attributable to the delivery of pharmaceutical products in the military facility environment which were prescribed by a network provider.

"(e) PHARMACY DATA TRANSACTION SERVICE.—Not later than April 1, 2000, the Secretary of Defense shall implement the use of the Pharmacy Data Transaction Service in all fixed facilities of the uniformed services under the jurisdiction of the Secretary, the TRICARE retail pharmacy program, and the national mail-order pharmacy program.

(B) the understanding by prescribers of the reasons that military medical treatment facilities or civilian contractors preferred certain pharmaceuticals to others; and

(C) the impact of any restrictions on access to non-formulary prescriptions on the clinical decisions of the prescribers and the aggregate cost, quality, and accessibility of health care provided to covered beneficiaries;

(3) the operation of the Pharmacy Data Transaction Service required by subsection (e) of such section 1074g; and

(3) Shortages of conventional air-launched cruise missiles during Operation Allied Force (conducted against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the spring of 1999) and the necessity to replenish inventories of land-attack Tomahawk cruise missiles following that operation indicate the critical need to maintain sufficient inventories of precision munitions.

(5) The year those inventories would be achieved within existing or planned production capacity if produced at—

(A) the minimum sustained production rate;

(B) the most economic production rate; and

(C) the maximum production rate.

(6) The required level of funding to support production for each of those types of munitions at each of the production rates specified in paragraph (5), compared to the funding programmed for each type of munition in the future-years defense program using the acquisition plans specified in paragraph (4).

(21) A description of the most critical lessons learned that could lead to long-term doctrinal, organizational, and technological changes.

(c) CLASSIFICATION OF REPORT.—The Secretary of Defense shall submit both the report and the preliminary report in a classified form and an unclassified form.

SEC. 1212. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING THE NEED FOR VIGOROUS PROSECUTION OF WAR CRIMES, GENOCIDE, AND CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY IN THE FORMER REPUBLIC OF YUGOSLAVIA.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The United Nations Security Council created the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (in this section referred to as the "ICTY") by resolution on May 25, 1993.

(2) Although the ICTY has indicted 89 people since its creation, those indictments have only resulted in the trial and conviction of 8 criminals.

(3) The ICTY has jurisdiction to investigate grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions (Article 2), violations of the laws or customs of war (Article 3), genocide (Article 4), and crimes against humanity (Article 5).

(4) The Chief Prosecutor of the ICTY, Justice Louise Arbour, stated on July 7, 1998, to the Contact Group for the former Yugoslavia, that "[t]he Prosecutor believes that the nature and scale of the fighting indicate that an 'armed conflict', within the meaning of international law, exists in Kosovo. As a consequence, she intends to bring charges for crimes against humanity or war crimes, if evidence of such crimes is established".

(5) Reports from Kosovar Albanian refugees provide detailed accounts of systematic efforts to displace the entire Muslim population of Kosovo.

(6) In furtherance of this plan, Serbian troops, police, and paramilitary forces have engaged in detention and summary execution of men of all ages, wanton destruction of civilian housing, forcible expulsions, mass executions in at least 60 villages and towns, as well as widespread rape of women and young girls.

(7) These reports of atrocities provide prima facie evidence of war crimes and crimes against humanity, as well as possible genocide.

(8) Any criminal investigation is best served by the depositions and interviews of witnesses as soon after the commission of the crime as possible.

(9) The indictment, arrest, and trial of war criminals would provide a significant deterrent to further atrocities.

(10) The ICTY has issued 14 international warrants for war crimes suspects that have yet to be served, despite knowledge of the suspects' whereabouts.

(11) Vigorous prosecution of war crimes after the conflict in Bosnia may have prevented the ongoing atrocities in Kosovo.

(12) Investigative reporters have identified specific documentary evidence implicating the Serbian leadership in the commission of war crimes.

(13) NATO forces and forensic teams deployed in Kosovo have uncovered physical evidence of war crimes, including mass graves.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the United States, in coordination with other United Nations member states, should provide sufficient resources for an expeditious and thorough investigation of allegations of the atrocities and war crimes committed in Kosovo;

(2) the United States, through its intelligence services, should provide all possible cooperation in the gathering of evidence of sufficient specificity and credibility to secure the indictment of those responsible for the commission of war crimes, crimes against humanity, and genocide in the former Yugoslavia;

(3) where evidence warrants, indictments for war crimes, crimes against humanity, and genocide should be issued against suspects regardless of their position within the Serbian leadership;

(4) the United States and all nations have an obligation to honor arrest warrants issued by the ICTY and should use all appropriate means to apprehend and bring to justice through the ICTY individuals who are already under indictment;

(5) any final settlement regarding Kosovo should not bar the indictment, apprehension, or prosecution of persons accused of war crimes, crimes against humanity, or genocide committed during operations in Kosovo; and

(6) President Slobodan Milosevic should be held accountable for his actions while President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia or President of the Republic of Serbia in initiating four armed conflicts and taking actions leading to the deaths of tens of thousands of people and responsibility for murder, rape, terrorism, destruction, and ethnic cleansing.

(1) The identity, size, structure, and capabilities of the armed forces of the allies expected to participate in the major theater wars anticipated in the Quadrennial Defense Review.

(2) The priority accorded in the national military strategies and defense programs of the anticipated allies to contributing forces to United States-led coalitions in such major theater wars.

(3) The missions currently being conducted by the armed forces of the anticipated allies and the ability of the allied armed forces to conduct simultaneously their current missions and those anticipated in the event of major theater war.

(4) Any Department of Defense assumptions about the ability of allied armed forces to deploy or redeploy from their current missions in the event of a major theater war, including any role United States Armed Forces would play in assisting and sustaining such a deployment or redeployment.

(5) Any Department of Defense assumptions about the combat missions to be executed by such allied forces in the event of major theater war.

(6) The readiness of allied armed forces to execute any such missions.

(b) MILITARY EDUCATION AND TRAINING PROGRAMS.—The Secretary of each military department shall give due consideration to according a high priority to the attendance of military personnel of Poland, Hungary, and the Czech Republic at professional military education schools and training programs in the United States, including the United States Military Academy, the United States Naval Academy, the United States Air Force Academy, the National Defense University, the war colleges of the Armed Forces, the command and general staff officer courses of the Armed Forces, and other schools and training programs of the Armed Forces that admit personnel of foreign armed forces.

Subtitle D—Other Matters

SEC. 1231. MULTINATIONAL ECONOMIC EMBARGOES AGAINST GOVERNMENTS IN ARMED CONFLICT WITH THE UNITED STATES.

(a) Policy on the Establishment of Embargoes.—It is the policy of the United States, that upon the use of the Armed Forces of the United States to engage in hostilities against any foreign country, the President shall, as appropriate—

(1) seek the establishment of a multinational economic embargo against such country; and

(2) seek the seizure of its foreign financial assets.

(b) Reports to Congress.—Not later than 20 days after the first day of the engagement of the United States in hostilities described in subsection (a), the President shall, if the armed conflict has continued for 14 days, submit to Congress a report setting forth—

(1) the specific steps the United States has taken and will continue to take to establish a multinational economic embargo and to initiate financial asset seizure pursuant to subsection (a); and

(2) any foreign sources of trade or revenue that directly or indirectly support the ability of the adversarial government to sustain a military conflict against the United States.

SEC. 1232. LIMITATION ON DEPLOYMENT OF ARMED FORCES IN HAITI DURING FISCAL YEAR 2000 AND CONGRESSIONAL NOTICE OF DEPLOYMENTS TO HAITI.

(a) Limitation on Deployment.—No funds available to the Department of Defense during fiscal year 2000 may be expended after May 31, 2000, for the continuous deployment of United States Armed Forces in Haiti pursuant to the Department of Defense operation designated as Operation Uphold Democracy.

(b) Report.—Whenever there is a deployment of United States Armed Forces to Haiti after May 31, 2000, the President shall, not later than 96 hours after such deployment begins, transmit to Congress a written report regarding the deployment. In any such report, the President shall specify (1) the purpose of the deployment, and (2) the date on which the deployment is expected to end.

(b) Matters To Be Included.—The Secretary shall include in the report under subsection (a) the following:

(1) A net assessment analysis of the warfighting capabilities of the Combined Forces Command (CFC) of the United States and the Republic of Korea compared with the armed forces of North Korea.

(2) An assessment of challenges posed by the armed forces of North Korea to the defense of the Republic of Korea and to United States forces deployed to the region.

(3) An assessment of the current status and the future direction of weapons of mass destruction programs and ballistic missile programs of North Korea, including a determination as to whether or not North Korea—

(A) is continuing to pursue a nuclear weapons program;

(B) is seeking equipment and technology with which to enrich uranium; and

(C) is pursuing an offensive biological weapons program.

(c) Appropriate Congressional Committees.—In this section, the term "appropriate congressional committees" means—

(1) the Committee on International Relations and the Committee on Armed Services of the House of Representatives; and

(2) the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate.

SEC. 1234. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING THE CONTINUATION OF SANCTIONS AGAINST LIBYA.

(a) Findings.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) On December 21, 1988, 270 people, including 189 United States citizens, were killed in a terrorist bombing on Pan American Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland.

(2) The United Kingdom and the United States indicted two Libyan intelligence agents, Abd al-Baset Ali al-Megrahi and Al-Amin Khalifah Fhimah, in 1991 and sought their extradition from Libya to the United States or the United Kingdom to stand trial for this heinous terrorist act.

(3) The United Nations Security Council called for the extradition of those suspects in Security Council Resolution 731 and imposed sanctions on Libya in Security Council Resolutions 748 and 883 because Libyan leader Colonel Muammar Qadhafi refused to transfer the suspects to either the United States or the United Kingdom to stand trial.

(4) United Nations Security Council Resolutions 731, 748, and 883 demand that Libya cease all support for terrorism, turn over the two suspects, cooperate with the investigation and the trial, and address the issue of appropriate compensation.

(5) The sanctions in United Nations Security Council Resolutions 748 and 883 include—

(A) a worldwide ban on Libya's national airline;

(B) a ban on flights into and out of Libya by other nations' airlines; and

(C) a prohibition on supplying arms, airplane parts, and certain oil equipment to Libya, and a blocking of Libyan Government funds in other countries.

(6) Colonel Muammar Qadhafi for many years refused to extradite the suspects to either the United States or the United Kingdom and had insisted that he would only transfer the suspects to a third and neutral country to stand trial.

(7) On August 24, 1998, the United States and the United Kingdom agreed to the proposal that Colonel Qadhafi transfer the suspects to The Netherlands, where they would stand trial under a Scottish court, under Scottish law, and with a panel of Scottish judges.

(8) The United Nations Security Council endorsed the United States-United Kingdom proposal on August 27, 1998 in United Nations Security Council Resolution 1192.

(9) The United States, consistent with United Nations Security Council resolutions, called on Libya to ensure the production of evidence, including the presence of witnesses before the court, and to comply fully with all the requirements of the United Nations Security Council resolutions.

(10) After years of intensive diplomacy, Colonel Qadhafi finally transferred the two Libyan suspects to The Netherlands on April 5, 1999, and the United Nations Security Council, in turn, suspended its sanctions against Libya that same day.

(11) Libya has only fulfilled one of four conditions (the transfer of the two suspects accused in the Lockerbie bombing) set forth in United Nations Security Council Resolutions 731, 748, and 883 that would justify the lifting of United Nations Security Council sanctions against Libya.

(12) Libya has not fulfilled the other three conditions (cooperation with the Lockerbie investigation and trial, renunciation of and ending support for terrorism, and payment of appropriate compensation) necessary to lift the United Nations Security Council sanctions.

(13) The United Nations Secretary General issued a report to the Security Council on June 30, 1999, on the issue of Libya's compliance with the remaining conditions.

(14) Any member of the United Nations Security Council has the right to introduce a resolution to lift the sanctions against Libya now that the United Nations Secretary General's report has been issued.

(15) The United States Government considers Libya a state sponsor of terrorism and the State Department Report, "Patterns of Global Terrorism; 1998", stated that Colonel Qadhafi "continued publicly and privately to support Palestinian terrorist groups, including the PIJ and the PFLP-GC".

(16) United States Government sanctions (other than sanctions on food or medicine) should be maintained on Libya, and in accordance with United States law, the Secretary of State should keep Libya on the list of countries the governments of which have repeatedly provided support for acts of international terrorism under section 6(j) of the Export Administration Act of 1979 in light of Libya's ongoing support for terrorist groups.

(b) Sense of Congress.—It is the sense of Congress that the President should use all diplomatic means necessary, including the use of the United States veto at the United Nations Security Council, to prevent the Security Council from lifting sanctions against Libya until Libya fulfills all of the conditions set forth in United Nations Security Council Resolutions 731, 748, and 883.

SEC. 1235. SENSE OF CONGRESS AND REPORT ON DISENGAGING FROM NONCRITICAL OVERSEAS MISSIONS INVOLVING UNITED STATES COMBAT FORCES.

(a) Findings.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) It is the National Security Strategy of the United States to "deter and defeat large-scale, cross-border aggression in two distant theaters in overlapping time frames".

(2) The deterrence of Iraq and Iran in Southwest Asia and the deterrence of North Korea in Northeast Asia represent two such potential large-scale, cross-border theater requirements.

(3) The United States has 120,000 military personnel permanently assigned to the Southwest Asia and Northeast Asia theaters.

(4) The United States has an additional 70,000 military personnel assigned to non-NATO/non-Pacific threat foreign countries.

(5) The United States has more than 6,000 military personnel in Bosnia-Herzegovina on indefinite assignment.

(6) The United States has diverted permanently assigned resources from other theaters to support operations in the Balkans.

(7) The United States provides military forces to seven active United Nations peacekeeping operations, including some missions that have continued for decades.

(8) Between 1986 and 1998, the number of United States military deployments per year has nearly tripled at the same time the Department of Defense budget has been reduced in real terms by 38 percent.

(9) The Army has 10 active-duty divisions today, down from 18 in 1991, while on an average day in fiscal year 1998, 28,000 United States Army soldiers were deployed to more than 70 countries for over 300 separate missions.

(10) The number of fighter wings in the active component of the Air Force has gone from 22 to 13 since 1991, while 70 percent of air sorties in Operation Allied Force over the Balkans were United States-flown and the Air Force continues to enforce northern and southern no-fly zones in Iraq. In response, the Air Force has initiated a "stop loss" program to block normal retirements and separations.

(11) The Navy has been reduced in size to 339 ships, its lowest level since 1938, necessitating the redeployment of the only overseas homeported aircraft carrier from the western Pacific to the Mediterranean to support Operation Allied Force.

(12) In 1998, just 10 percent of eligible carrier naval aviators (27 out of 261) accepted continuation bonuses and remained in the service.

(13) In 1998, 48 percent of Air Force pilots eligible for continuation chose to leave the service.

(14) The Army could fall 6,000 below congressionally authorized strength levels by the end of 1999.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the readiness of United States military forces to execute the National Security Strategy of the United States referred to in subsection (a)(1) is being eroded by a combination of declining defense budgets and expanded missions; and

(2) there may be missions to which the United States is contributing Armed Forces from which the United States can begin disengaging.

(c) REPORT REQUIREMENT.—Not later than March 1, 2000, the President shall submit to the Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and the Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives a report prioritizing the ongoing global missions to which the United States is contributing forces. The President shall include in the report a feasibility analysis of how the United States can—

(1) shift resources from low priority missions in support of higher priority missions;

(2) consolidate or reduce United States troop commitments worldwide; and

(3) end low priority missions.

"(D) That the United States will retain the ability to increase the delivery capacity of its strategic nuclear delivery systems should threats arise that require more substantial United States strategic forces.

"(3) If the President submits the certification described in paragraph (2), then the applicable number in effect under paragraph (1)(B)—

(1) the strategic nuclear forces and nuclear modernization programs of the People's Republic of China and every other nation possessing nuclear weapons should be taken into full consideration in the negotiation of such treaty; and

(2) the reductions in United States strategic nuclear forces under such a treaty should not be to such an extent as to impede the capability of the United States to respond militarily to any militarily significant increase in the threat to United States security or strategic stability posed by the People's Republic of China and any other nation.

SEC. 1503. REPORT ON STRATEGIC STABILITY UNDER START III.

(a) Report.—Not later than September 1, 2000, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and the Committee on Armed Services of the House of Representatives a report, to be prepared in consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence, on the stability of the future strategic nuclear posture of the United States for deterring the Russian Federation and other potential nuclear adversaries.

(4) The Secretary's assessment of Russia's nuclear force posture under START III compared to its present force, including its size, vulnerability, and capability for launch on tactical warning, and an assessment of whether strategic stability would be enhanced or diminished under START III, including any stabilizing and destabilizing factors and possible incentives or disincentives for Russia to launch a first strike, or otherwise use nuclear weapons, against the United States in a possible future crisis.

(5) The Secretary's assessment of the nuclear weapon capabilities of China and other potential nuclear weapon "rogue" states in the foreseeable future, and an assessment of the effect of these capabilities on strategic stability, including their ability and inclination to use nuclear weapons against the United States in a possible future crisis.

(6) The Secretary's assessment of whether asymmetries between the United States and Russia, including doctrine, nonstrategic nuclear weapons, and active and passive defenses, are likely to erode strategic stability in the foreseeable future.

(7) Any other matters the Secretary believes are important to such a consideration of strategic stability under future nuclear postures.

(2) OPENING.—On the date of the termination of the withdrawal and reservation of lands by this section, such lands shall not be open to any form of appropriation under the general land laws, including the mining laws and the mineral leasing and geothermal leasing laws, until the Secretary of the Interior publishes in the Federal Register an appropriate order stating the date upon which such lands shall be restored to the public domain and opened.

(e) EXTENSION OF INITIAL WITHDRAWAL AND RESERVATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than three years before the termination date of the initial withdrawal and reservation of lands by this section, the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Air Force shall notify Congress and the Secretary of the Interior concerning whether the Navy or Air Force, as the case may be, will have a continuing military need, after such termination date, for all or any portion of such lands.

(2) DUTIES REGARDING CONTINUING MILITARY NEED.—(A) If the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Air Force determines that there will be a continuing military need for any lands withdrawn by this section, the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Air Force, as the case may be, shall—

(A) consult with the Secretary of the Interior concerning any adjustments to be made to the extent of, or to the allocation of management responsibility for, such lands; and

(B) file with the Secretary of the Interior, not later than one year after the notice required by paragraph (1), an application for extension of the withdrawal and reservation of such lands.

(1) NOTICE OF INTENT TO RELINQUISH.—At any time during the withdrawal and reservation of lands under this section, but not later than three years before the termination of the withdrawal and reservation, if the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Air Force determines that there is no continuing military need for lands withdrawn and reserved by this section, or any portion of such lands, the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Air Force, as the case may be, shall notify the Secretary of the Interior of an intent to relinquish jurisdiction over such lands, which notice shall specify the proposed date of relinquishment.

(2) AUTHORITY TO ACCEPT RELINQUISHMENT.—The Secretary of the Interior may accept jurisdiction over any lands covered by a notice of intent to relinquish jurisdiction under this subsection if the Secretary of the Interior determines that the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Air Force has taken the environmental response actions required under this section.

(3) ORDER.—If the Secretary of the Interior accepts jurisdiction over lands covered by a notice of intent to relinquish jurisdiction under this subsection before the termination date of the withdrawal and reservation of such lands under this section, the Secretary of the Interior shall publish in the Federal Register an appropriate order that shall—

SEC. 3032. MILITARY USE OF CABEZA PRIETA NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE AND CABEZA PRIETA WILDERNESS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The historic use of the areas designated as the Cabeza Prieta National Wildlife Refuge and the Cabeza Prieta Wilderness by the Marine Corps and the Air Force has been integral to the effective operation of the Barry M. Goldwater Air Force Range.

(2) Continued use of the Cabeza Prieta National Wildlife Refuge and Cabeza Prieta Wilderness by the Marine Corps and the Air Force to support military aviation training will remain necessary to ensure the readiness of the Armed Forces.

(3) The historic use of the Cabeza Prieta National Wildlife Refuge and Cabeza Prieta Wilderness by the Marine Corps and the Air Force has coexisted for many years with the wildlife conservation and wilderness purposes for which the refuge and wilderness were established.

(4) The designation of the Cabeza Prieta National Wildlife Refuge and the Cabeza Prieta Wilderness recognizes the area as one of our nation's most ecologically and culturally valuable areas.

(b) MANAGEMENT AND USE OF REFUGE AND WILDERNESS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Interior, in coordination with the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Air Force, shall manage the Cabeza Prieta National Wildlife Refuge and Cabeza Prieta Wilderness—

(A) for the purposes for which the refuge and wilderness were established; and

(B) to support current and future military aviation training needs consistent with the November 21, 1994, memorandum of understanding among the Department of the Interior, the Department of the Navy, and the Department of the Air Force, including any extension or other amendment of such memorandum of understanding under this section.

(2) CONSTRUCTION.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, nothing in this subtitle shall be construed to effect the following:

(A) The National Wildlife Refuge System Administration Act of 1966 (16 U.S.C. 668dd et seq.) or any other law related to management of the National Wildlife Refuge System.

(B) Any Executive order or public land order in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act with respect to the Cabeza Prieta National Wildlife Refuge.

(c) EXTENSION OF MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING.—The Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force shall extend the memorandum of understanding referred to in subsection (b)(1)(B). The memorandum of understanding shall be extended for a period that coincides with the duration of the withdrawal and reservation of the Barry M. Goldwater Air Force Range made by section 3031.

(d) OTHER AMENDMENTS OF MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING.—

(1) AMENDMENTS TO MEET MILITARY AVIATION TRAINING NEEDS.—(A) When determined by the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Air Force to be essential to support military aviation training, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Air Force, and the Secretary of the Interior shall negotiate amendments to the memorandum of understanding referred to in subsection (b)(1)(B) in order—

(i) to revise existing or establish new low-level training routes or to otherwise accommodate low-level overflight;

(ii) to establish new or enlarged areas closed to public use as surface safety zones; or

(iii) to accommodate the maintenance, upgrade, replacement, or installation of existing or new associated ground instrumentation.

(B) Any amendment of the memorandum of understanding shall be consistent with the responsibilities under law of the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Air Force, and the Secretary of the Interior, respectively.

(C) As provided by the existing provisions of the National Wildlife Refuge System Improvement Act of 1997 (Public Law 105–57) and the Arizona Desert Wilderness Act of 1990 (Public Law 101–628), amendments to the memorandum of understanding to revise existing or establish new low-level training routes or to otherwise accommodate low-level overflight are not subject to compatibility determinations nor precluded by the designation of lands within the Cabeza Prieta National Wildlife Refuge as wilderness.

(D) Amendments to the memorandum of understanding with respect to the upgrade or replacement of existing associated ground instrumentation or the installation of new associated ground instrumentation shall not be precluded by the existing designation of lands within the Cabeza Prieta National Wildlife Refuge as wilderness to the extent that the Secretary of the Interior, after consultation with the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Air Force, determines that such actions, considered both individually and cumulatively, create similar or less impact than the existing ground instrumentation permitted by the Arizona Desert Wilderness Act of 1990.

(2) OTHER AMENDMENTS.—The Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Navy, or the Secretary of the Air Force may initiate renegotiation of the memorandum of understanding at any time to address other needed changes, and the memorandum of understanding may be amended to accommodate such changes by the mutual consent of the parties consistent with their respective responsibilities under law.

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE OF AMENDMENTS.—Amendments to the memorandum of understanding shall take effect 90 days after the date on which the Secretary of the Interior submits notice of such amendments to the Committees on Environment and Public Works, Energy and Natural Resources, and Armed Services of the Senate and the Committees on Resources and Armed Services of the House of Representatives.

(e) ACCESS RESTRICTIONS.—If the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Air Force determines that military operations, public safety, or national security require the closure to the public of any road, trail, or other portion of the Cabeza Prieta National Wildlife Refuge or the Cabeza Prieta Wilderness, the Secretary of the Interior shall take such action as is determined necessary or desirable to effect and maintain such closure, including agreeing to amend the memorandum of understanding to establish new or enhanced surface safety zones.

(f) STATUS OF CONTAMINATED LANDS.—

(1) DECONTAMINATION.—Throughout the duration of the withdrawal of the Barry M. Goldwater Range under section 3031, the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Air Force shall, to the extent that funds are made available for such purpose, carry out a program of decontamination of the portion of the Cabeza Prieta National Wildlife Refuge and the Cabeza Prieta Wilderness used for military training purposes that maintains a level of cleanup of such lands equivalent to the level of cleanup of such lands as of the date of the enactment of this Act. Any environmental contamination of the Cabeza Prieta National Wildlife Refuge or the Cabeza Prieta Wilderness caused or contributed to by the Department of the Navy or the Department of the Air Force shall be the responsibility of the Department of the Navy or the Department of the Air Force, respectively, and not the responsibility of the Department of the Interior.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1059) authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2000 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense programs of the Department of Energy, to prescribe personnel strengths for such fiscal year for the armed forces, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House amendment struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House with an amendment which is a substitute for the Senate bill and the House amendment. The differences between the Senate bill, the House amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

SUMMARY STATEMENT OF CONFERENCE ACTION

The conferees recommend authorizations for the Department of Defense for procurement, research and development, test and evaluation, operation and maintenance, working capital funds, military construction and family housing, weapons programs of the Department of Energy, and the civil defense that have budget authority implications of $288.8 billion.

SUMMARY TABLE OF AUTHORIZATIONS

The defense authorization act provides authorizations for appropriations but does not generally provide budget authority. Budget authority is provided in appropriations acts.

In order to relate the conference recommendations to the Budget Resolution, matter in addition to the dollar authorizations contained in this bill must be taken into account. A number of programs in the defense function are authorized permanently or, in certain instances, authorized in other annual legislation. In addition, this authorization bill would establish personnel levels and include a number of legislative provisions affecting military compensation.

The following table summarizes authorizations included in the bill for fiscal year 2000 and, in addition, summarizes the implications of the conference action for the budget totals for national defense (budget function 050).

The conferees note the conclusion of the Army's April 1999 report to Congress, which indicated that, based on extensive ground testing, "the performance of the PACM design has been demonstrated." the conferees also note that the first PACM flight test appears to have been successful. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to complete the PACM flight test program using funds previously appropriated for this purpose.

Based on information obtained from the PACM ground and flight test program, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to assess the capability of the PACM missile to counter cruise missiles, including low-observable cruise missiles, compared to the capability of the Patriot PAC–3 missile and other upgraded versions of the Patriot missile to counter such threats, and the opportunity costs of PACM acquisition. In preparing this assessment, the Secretary shall utilize the Defense Science Board. If, based on the findings of this assessment, the Secretary determines that production of PACM missiles is warranted during fiscal year 2000, up to $35.0 million of funds authorized to be appropriated in Missile Procurement, Army, may be made available to retrofit and improve the current inventory of Patriot missiles in order to meet current and projected threats from cruise missiles. The Secretary shall submit a report on his assessment and recommendations to the congressional defense committees by March 15, 2000.

Advanced SEAL delivery system

The budget request included $21.5 million for procurement of advanced SEAL delivery system (ASDS) components. An additional $17.3 million was included for ASDS advanced procurement requirements.

The Commander in Chief of United States Special Operations Command has asked the conferees to reallocate requested funding for the ASDS program. The conferees understand the reallocation of funding is necessary for additional support equipment, interim support spares, pre-planned product improvements, and the complete data package for system certifications previously deferred. The conferees agree to support this request and reallocate funding as follows:

(1) A decrease of $9.3 million for ASDS advanced procurement;

(2) A decrease of $13.8 million for ASDS procurement;

(3) A decrease of $3.0 million for ASDS Operation and Maintenance, Defense-Wide; and

(4) An increase of $26.1 million in PE 1160404BB, Special Operations Tactical Systems Development.

The conferees continue to be very concerned about the cost growth associated with this program, contractor performance, and the elimination of critical development and testing activities in an effort to mitigate rising costs. The issues associated with the development of this program have yet to be adequately addressed. The conferees are particularly concerned with the level of oversight exercised over this program to date, and agree to establish this program as an item of special interest and will monitor the progress of this program closely. The conferees direct the Commander in Chief of the Special Operations Command to provide a report to the congressional defense committees, no later than March 1, 2000, that outlines the following:

(1) changes in requirements that have been made since the last acquisition milestone;

(2) originally planned and/or programmed development and testing activities that have been modified or eliminated;

(3) program modifications and/or procurement objectives that will have to be modified due to unforseen cost growth;

(4) corrective actions to address program oversight and cost growth issues;

(5) alternatives to the current baseline program that would provide for increased program stability; and

(6) the analysis used to determine the future operational suitability of ASDS without vessel shock testing and an operational degaussing system offered in the original contractor proposal.

The conferees recognize that there is no formal requirement for shock testing and an operational degaussing system, but are concerned that pressures associated with the cost growth of this program may result in safety tradeoffs that could put crews needlessly at risk. Finally, the conferees are concerned that the Department may not have been providing adequate supervision to this important acquisition program. The conferees understand that the dollar value of this program may not meet the normal thresholds that would automatically elevate this program to an acquisition category requiring more direct involvement of the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology. Nevertheless, given the troubled history of this program, and the concern that this program may not be out of difficulty yet, the conferees believe that this program should be elevated to include a Department of Defense level of review. If, after reviewing the situation, the Secretary of Defense believes that such a change is not appropriate, he shall report to the congressional defense committees on that determination of the appropriate acquisition category for the ASDS program and any justification for that decision. If the Secretary decides not to elevate ASDS to include a DOD level of review, the conferees will expect the justification to include more rationale rather than merely mechanically applying dollar thresholds values to the ASDS funding profile.

Special operations forces small arms and weapons

The budget request include $23.4 million for special operations forces small arms and weapons.

The Senate bill would authorize an increase of $15.8 million, $9.8 million for the body armor load carriage system and $6.0 million for the integrated day/night fire control observer device (INOD).

The House amendment would authorize an increase of $7.0 million for Nightstar binoculars.

The conferees agree to authorize an increase of $12.0 million, $7.0 million for nightstar binoculars and $5.0 million for INOD procurement, for a total authorization of $35.4 million.

Chemical and Biological Defense Program

The budget request included $716.9 million for the Chemical and Biological Defense Program (CBDP). The request includes $377.4 million for procurement and $339.5 million for research and development.

The Senate bill would authorize increase for the following chemical and biological defense program activities: $15.0 million in the Joint Service Lightweight Integrated Suit Technology program; $3.9 million in the M45 General Aviation Mask; $1.5 million in the Modular Decontamination Systems program; $5.0 million in PE 62384BP for Safeguard; $10.0 million in the M93 FOX NBC Reconnaissance Vehicle; $4.0 million in PE 63384BP for the Chemical and Biological Individual Sampler; and, $5.2 million in PE 63384BP for the Small Unit Biological Detector program.

The House amendment would authorize an increase of $3.5 million in PE 61384BP and an increase of $5.5 million in PE 62384BP to accelerate basic and applied research in advanced technologies for chemical and biological point detectors, an increase of $1.0 million in PE 61384BP for basic research in organic and inorganic optical computing device materials for use in standoff sensors for detection and identification of chemical agents, and an increase of $4.0 million in PE 62384BP to continue the Safeguard technology development and demonstration program.

The conferees agree to authorize: an increase in PE 61384BP of $1.0 million for optical computing device materials and an increase of $3.5 million for chemical and biological point detector technologies; an increase in PE 62384BP of $3.0 million for Safeguard and an increase of $4.5 million for chemical and biological point detector technologies; an increase of $1.0 million for procurement of protective masks; and, an increase of $1.5 million in the Modular Decontamination Systems program.

Section 1701 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994 (Public Law 103-160) requires that the budget requests of the Department of Defense reflect a coordinated and integrated chemical-biological defense program for the military departments, that shall not be included in the budget accounts of the military departments, but shall be set forth as a separate account in the Department's budget. The conferees remain concerned that the Defense Department continues to request funding for chemical-biological defense programs through other program elements or accounts. The conferees note that the management of this program may be stifled by the Administration's reluctance to nominate a candidate for the statutorily required position of Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Nuclear, Chemical and Biological Defense Programs. The conferees direct the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology to ensure that all research, development, and acquisition of chemical and biological defense technologies and equipment are integrated, coordinated, and that funding for such programs is requested in the chemical-biological defense program.

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 2000 included no authorization for National Guard and Reserve Procurement in the Department of Defense.

The Senate bill would authorize no funds.

The House amendment would authorize $60.0 million.

The conferees recommended an authorization of $60.0 million. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Common rack and launcher test set

The conferees support Department of Defense efforts to achieve support equipment commonality across the services and note the recent demonstration of the capabilities of the Navy's Common Rack and Launcher Test Set (CRALTS). The conferees understand that the CRALTS is capable of replacing numerous system-specific test sets currently in use for bomb racks, missile launchers, and pylons.

As the CRALTS may have applicability to both the Army and Air Force aviation communities, the conferees direct the Secretaries of the Army and Air Force to evaluate the utility of CRALTS for service requirements and report their findings to the congressional defense committees by March 31, 2000.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Authorization of Appropriations

Authorization of Appropriations (secs. 101–108)

The Senate bill contained provisions (secs. 101–107) that would authorize the recommended fiscal year 2000 funding levels for the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, Air Force, Defense-Wide Activities, Defense Inspector General, Chemical Demilitarization Program, and the Defense Health Program.

The House amendment contained similar provisions.

The conference agreement includes these provisions.

Chemical demilitarization program (sec. 107)

The budget request for the Army included $1,169.0 million for the chemical agents and munitions destruction program.

The Senate bill would authorize no funding for Chemical Agents and Munitions Destruction, Army, but contained a provision (sec. 106) that would authorize $1,164.5 million for destruction of the lethal chemical agents and munitions stockpile pursuant to section 1412 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1986 (Public Law 99–45) and U.S. chemical warfare material not covered by section 1412 of the Act, a $4.5 million reduction to the budget request.

The House amendment would authorize no funding for Chemical Agents and Munitions Destruction, Army, but contained a provision (sec. 107) that would authorize $1,012.0 million for the Department of Defense (DoD) for fiscal year 2000, a reduction of $157.0 million to the budget request.

The conferees agree to a provision that would authorize $1,024.0 million for the chemical agents and munitions destruction program, including $294.0 million for research and development, $191.5 million for procurement, and $538.5 million for operations and maintenance.

Section 1521(f) of title 50, United States Code, requires that funding for the chemical agents and munitions destruction program, including funds for military construction projects, shall be set forth in the budget of the Department of Defense as a separate account, and shall not be included in the budget accounts for any military department. The conferees note that section 152 of the Strom Thurmond National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1999 (Public Law 105–261) provides that funding for the chemical stockpile emergency preparedness program will be contained in the budget of the Department of Defense and will be made available to the Federal Emergency Management Agency to implement its responsibilities under the program. The conferees expect that the Secretary of Defense will comply with these requirements in any future budget request for the chemical agents and munitions destruction program.

The conferees note the concerns expressed in the House report accompanying H.R. 1401 (H. Rept. 106–162) and the Senate report accompanying S. 1059 (S. Rept. 106–50) regarding the total cost of the chemical demilitarization program, the magnitude and complexity of the program, and the need to proceed thoroughly and expeditiously to ensure that the destruction of the stockpile is accomplished in a timely manner using the appropriate destruction technologies.

The conferees note that concerns have been raised regarding the management and execution of the chemical demilitarization program which cited the presence of unobligated and unexpended balances in program funding. A recent program funding execution assessment by the DOD Comptroller and a review by the General Accounting Office cite that the reasons for the low expenditure rates have been beyond the influence and control of the program office, and indicate that no instances of inadequate program management controls or gross violation of DOD financial regulations have been found. The Comptroller's review indicates that $87.9 million in program funding could be deferred to fiscal year 2001, but concluded that the budgeted funds are needed to satisfy valid program requirements and that any deferral of funds would affect the ability of the program to meet the legislated destruction-completion date of April 29, 2007. The Comptroller's review further indicated that any funding decrease for fiscal year 2000 would have to be added back in a future budget. The conferees intend to continue to monitor closely the management and execution of the program to ensure its efficient execution and the availability of the funds necessary to meet the objectives of the program.

Section 8065 of the Omnibus Consolidated Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1997 (Public Law 104–208) required the Secretary of Defense to identify and demonstrate not less than two alternatives to the baseline incineration process for the demilitarization of assembled chemical munitions. The conferees expect that the Secretary will submit to the Congress in September 1999 the results of an assessment of the three alternative technologies that were previously selected for demonstration under the Assembled Chemical Weapons Assessment (ACWA) program. The conferees have been advised that the Department intends to conduct evaluations of the three remaining alternative technologies in the ACWA program in addition to the three technologies previously selected for demonstration and to allocate for this purpose $40.0 million of the funds that had been identified for potential deferral.

The conferees recognize that the deferral and other uncertainties in program funding create the potential for additional funding requirements that may have to be addressed during fiscal year 2000. As a part of a financial management and program execution assessment conducted in accordance with this Act, the conferees encourage the Secretary to identify requirements for additional funds that may be required in fiscal year 2000 to ensure execution of the program and to make appropriate recommendations for reprogramming or other actions necessary to provide those funds at the earliest opportunity.

The conferees underscore the concern that all necessary funds should be made available to ensure that the chemical demilitarization program is successfully completed within the deadline established by the Chemical Weapons Convention.

Subtitle B—Army Programs

Multiyear procurement authority for Army programs (sec. 111)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 111) that would authorize the Secretary of the Army to enter into a multiyear procurement contract for the M270A1 launcher, family of medium tactical vehicles, Javelin missile system, AH–64 Apache Longbow helicopter, M1A2 Abrams system enhancement program, and the M2A3 Bradley fighting vehicle.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 111) that would authorize the Secretary of the Army to enter into a multiyear procurement contract for the Javelin missile system, M2A3 Bradley fighting vehicle, AH–64 Apache Longbow helicopter, and M1A2 Abrams main battle tank upgrade program.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would authorize the Secretary of the Army to enter into a multiyear procurement contract for the Javelin missile system, AH-64 Apache Longbow helicopter, M1A2 Abrams system enhancement program combined with the Heavy Assault Bridge program, and the M2A3 Bradley fighting vehicle.

Procurement requirements for the Family of Medium Tactical Vehicles (sec. 112)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 113) that would revise the conditions for award of a second-source procurement contract for the family of medium tactical vehicles (FMTV).

The Senate bill did not contain any similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would repeal section 112 of the Strom Thurmond National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1999 (Public Law 105–261) and directs the Secretary of the Army to terminate the second source procurement program and to use competitive procedures for future production contracts.

The Army FMTV second source production program, phase II, calls for a second source producer to build 588 vehicles to demonstrate the ability of the manufacturer to produce FMTV vehicles for the price specified in the contractor's proposal. This program would allow the second source producer to propose modifications to the existing vehicle design for future truck production, while providing trucks with common components that are interchangeable among similarly configured models, and to provide these trucks at a lower price by reducing the cost of vehicle components through innovative designs and modifications.

The conferees are concerned that the Army has yet to provide any substantive analysis justifying the second source production program. While the Army has cited anecdotal examples of other programs that have benefited from competition, it has yet to provide any detailed analysis to support the assertion that the second source program will produce substantial cost savings in future production contracts. In fact, analysis completed by the General Accounting Office (GAO), and a separate review by the U.S. Army Cost and Economic Analysis Center (USACEAC) on the Army proposed course of action have suggested that achieving any savings through the second source program will be very difficult. Unless the Army is committed to increasing the level of funding associated with truck production significantly, the conferees believe future budgets will likely be unable to support two manufacturers. The conferees note the following regarding the Army's second source proposal:

(1) the FMTV program has suffered from low levels of production which resulted in uneconomical production rates;

(2) the history of Army truck production and shortfalls in other Army modernization programs do not suggest that the service will be able to add funding for future truck production;

(3) the proposed second source competition will stretch even further limited resources that would be applied to two producers, resulting in even less economical production rates.

The conferees are also concerned that a competition based upon performance specifications may essentially abandon the current 85 percent component commonality across the fourteen FMTV variants achieved by adherence to a validated technical data package (TDP). Failing to adhere to a TDP could result in greater life cycle costs, thereby vitiating any production cost savings achieved through competition. The conferees believe that reducing maintenance and logistical burdens are critically important and are concerned that competition tied to a performance specification in lieu of an approved technical data package would increase those burdens. Unfortunately, previous Army analysis of the proposed competition has ignored these potential added costs.

The conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to develop an acquisition strategy using competitive procedures for the next FMTV production contract, and to cancel any solicitation associated with the second source, phase II proposed contract award. The conferees further direct the proposed acquisition strategy include, but not be limited to the following:

(1) a validated FMTV TDP will serve as the baseline for family of medium tactical vehicle configuration;

(2) competitors shall warrant to the government the TDP for the vehicle they propose;

(3) any changes to the baseline will be subject to first article testing in accordance with existing performance, quality and environmental standards; and

(4) an estimation of life cycle costs as determined by validated life cycle cost models will be given at least equal weighting with other factors in the source selection evaluation criteria for the competition.

The conferees expect the Secretary of the Army to develop an acquisition strategy that ensures future procurements of FMTV trucks meet or exceed the achieved capabilities of the current fleet of vehicles while maintaining the maximum domestic content that is practicable. The conferees direct the Secretary to provide the proposed acquisition strategy to the congressional defense committees, no later than January 15, 2000.

Army aviation modernization (sec. 113)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 113) that would direct the Secretary of the Army to submit to the congressional defense committees a comprehensive plan for the modernization of Army helicopter forces. The provision established basic guidelines for Army aviation and directed that current plans be revised to reflect the following:

(1) Restore the Apache Longbow program to reflect filling the original objective of 747 aircraft and at least 227 fire control radars. The program should include a plan to qualify and train reserve component pilots as augmentation crews in the AH–64D Apache Longbow helicopters to insure 24–hour war fighting capability in deployed attack helicopter units. The program should field the number of AH–64D aircraft in reserve component aviation units required to implement this objective. The program should also include a plan to retire all AH–1 Cobra attack helicopters still in service as soon as practicable.

(2) Review the total requirements and acquisition objective for the RAH–66 Comanche. Provide a revised program that will field Comanche helicopters to the planned aviation force structure, reflecting the restoration of the Apache Longbow program to original acquisition quantities.

The committee is concerned with the logic that calls for an increase in force structure once these more capable aircraft are fielded. The Army has decided to assume risk and field aviation units with reduced numbers of current-capability reconnaissance aircraft. The increased capability of the Comanche, fielded on a one-to-one replacement basis, will significantly reduce that risk. It is unlikely that a greater than one-to-one replacement is necessary or feasible. If the total requirement for Comanche is reduced below what is currently programmed, the Army should reorient program funding and fielding plans to reflect program modifications.

(3) Establish a program to upgrade aging UH–1 Huey aircraft. Total force requirements for UH–1 utility helicopters must be revised to reflect both war fighting and support requirements of the theater commanders-in-chief.

(4) For requirements that cannot be met by UH–1 aircraft, identify additional UH–60 Blackhawk requirements and an acquisition strategy to reflect both war fighting and support requirements of the theater commanders in chief. Establish a UH–60 modernization program to provide required enhancements to existing aircraft.

(5) Maintain the schedule and funding for CH–47 Chinook helicopter service life extension effort.

(6) Establish an OH–58D Kiowa Warrior upgrade program to ensure the viability of these aircraft until they are retired from service.

(7) Provide a revised assessment of the Army's present and future helicopter requirements and inventory, including the number of aircraft, average age of aircraft, availability of spare parts, flight hour costs, roles and functions assigned to the fleet as a whole and to its individual types of aircraft, and the mix of active component aircraft and reserve component aircraft in the fleet.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of the Army to expand the scope of the plan to modernize Army helicopter forces.

The conferees continue to be concerned about the ability of the Army to maintain the fleet of rotary wing aircraft that is rapidly aging. A growing number of obsolescent parts are affecting procurements of major end items, as well as procurements of spare parts. The conferees note that the Senate report S. 1059 (S. Rept. 106–50) accompanying the provision directed the Army to address how it intends to identify the extent of this problem over time, and address how the service will deal with this issue as technology continues to evolve. The conferees recognize that future transformation of the Army and corresponding changes to force structure could result in a different requirement for AH–64D Longbow aircraft. The conferees believe, however, that any requirement for attack helicopters should consist exclusively of AH–64D Longbow aircraft to support operations and training commonality.

The conferees direct that not more than 90 percent of the total of the amount appropriated pursuant to the authorization of appropriations in section 101(2), Aircraft Procurement, Army, may be obligated before the date that is 30 days after the date on which the Secretary of the Army submits to the congressional defense committees a revised comprehensive plan for the modernization of the Army's helicopter fleet. The Secretary of the Army shall design a plan that is complete, and will be fully funded in future budget submissions.

Multiple Launch Rocket System (sec. 114)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 114) that would authorize the Army to make available $500,000 of funds available under Missile Procurement, Army, to complete the development of reuse and demilitarization tools and technologies for use in the disposition of Army Multiple Launch Rocket System rockets.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Extension of pilot program on sales of manufactured articles and services of certain Army industrial facilities without regard to availability from domestic sources (sec. 115)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 142) that would extend authorization for the pilot program for Army industrial facilities, which allows the Army to sell to commercial entities articles or services that will ultimately be incorporated into weapon systems procured by the Department of Defense.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 112) that would also require an update of an Inspector General report.

The Senate recedes.

Extension of authority to carry out Armament Retooling and Manufacturing Support Initiative (sec. 116)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 141) that would extend the authorization of the Armament Retooling and Manufacturing Support Initiative through fiscal year 2001.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Subtitle C–Navy Programs

F/A–18E/F Super Hornet aircraft program (sec. 121)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 125) that would authorize the Secretary of the Navy to enter into a multiyear procurement contract for the F/A–18E/F aircraft.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 121).

The Senate recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Arleigh Burke class destroyer program (sec. 122)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 122) that would authorize an extension of the 1997 multiyear authorization to include the fiscal year 2002 and fiscal year 2003 DDG–51 procurements. The provision would also increase the total number of ships authorized for multiyear procurement from 12 to 18. In addition the provision would authorize the Secretary of the Navy to transfer up to $190.0 million for fiscal year 2000 advance procurement and up to $371.0 million for advance procurement in fiscal year 2001 for the ships associated with the extension of the multiyear procurement.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Repeal of requirement for annual report from shipbuilders under certain nuclear attack submarine programs (sec. 123)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 123) that would repeal the requirement for an annual report on design responsibility for the Virginia-class attack submarine program by amending section 121(g) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

LHD–8 amphibious assault ship program (sec. 124)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 121) that would authorize construction of LHD–8 and advance procurement and construction of components for the LHD–8. The provision would also authorize an increase of $375.0 million for these purposes.

The House amendment contained no similar provision but would authorize an increase of $15.0 million for advance procurement for LHD–8.

The House recedes.

D–5 missile program (sec. 125)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 143) that would require the Secretary of Defense to prepare a report on the D–5 missile program.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Subtitle D—Air Force Programs

F–22 aircraft program (sec. 131)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 131) that would require the Secretary of Defense to certify to the congressional defense committees that the F–22 aircraft program retains adequate test content and is projected to meet its development and production cost caps prior to the Secretary of the Air Force contracting for low rate initial production.

The House amendment contained no similar provision. The House report accompanying H.R. 1401 (H. Rept. 106–162) would direct the Secretary of the Air Force to provide a similar certification.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment that would require a report if the Secretary of Defense is unable to make the certifications. The conferees agree that the certification by the Secretary of the Air Force identified in the House report is no longer required.

Replacement options for conventional air-launched cruise missile (sec. 132)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 227) that would require the Secretary of the Air Force to submit to the congressional defense committees a report on how the requirement currently being met by the conventional air-launched cruise missile will be met upon depletion of that weapon system.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Procurement of firefighting equipment for the Air National Guard and the Air Force Reserve (sec. 133)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 152) that would authorize the Secretary of the Air Force to make available up to $16.0 million of funds available under section 103, for the purpose of modernizing airborne firefighting capabilities of the Air National Guard and Air Force Reserve.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

F–16 tactical manned reconnaissance aircraft (sec. 134)

The conferees agree to a new provision that would exempt funds authorized in this Act for the medium altitude electro-optic (MAEO) reconnaissance cameras from limitations imposed in section 216 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997.

Subtitle E—Chemical Stockpile Destruction Program

Destruction of existing stockpile of lethal chemical agents and munitions (sec. 141)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 141) that would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct an assessment of the chemical agents and munitions stockpile destruction program and authorize the Secretary to take those actions permitted under existing law to achieve the purposes of the assessment and would direct the Secretary to recommend any additional legislative authority that may be needed.

The House provision would amend paragraph 1412(c)(2) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1986 (Public Law 99–145) to provide that facilities constructed to carry out the chemical stockpile destruction program shall be disposed of in accordance with the law and site-specific, mutual agreements between the Secretary of the Army and the governor of the state in which the facility is located.

Lastly, the provision would amend subsection 1412(c) to allow non-stockpile chemical agents, munitions, or related materials specifically designated by the Secretary of Defense to be destroyed at stockpile facilities if the affected states have issued the appropriate permits. The conferees expect that site specific decisions of the type indicated would be arrived at in accordance with review processes that permit the views of the local jurisdictions to be considered.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Comptroller General to conduct a review and assessment of the chemical agents and munitions destruction program and to report the results of this assessment to the congressional defense committees not later than March 1, 2000.

Comptroller General report on anticipated effects of proposed changes in operations of storage sites for lethal chemical agents and munitions. (sec. 142)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1027) that would require the Comptroller General to review the Army's plans to reduce the federal civilian workforce involved in the operation of the eight storage sites for lethal chemical agents and munitions in the continental United States and to convert to contractor operation of the storage sites.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

In addition, the conferees agree to authorize an increase of $3.2 million in PE 63504N for the common towed array program.

Trident SSGN design

The budget request included no funding for the design of a conversion to modify some of the Ohio class Trident ballistic missile submarines (SSBN) to a nuclear-powered guided-missile submarine (SSGN) configuration.

The Senate bill would authorize an increase of $13.0 million in PE 63563N to begin design activity for converting some Trident SSBNs to an SSGN-configuration.

The House amendment would authorize the budget request.

The conferees note that section 1302 of the National Defense Authorization Act for 1998 (Public Law 105–85), as amended by section 1501 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2000, limits the expenditure of funds for the retirement of any of the 18 Trident SSBNs and other strategic nuclear systems unless START II enters into force, or the President makes certain certifications regarding these systems. The conferees further note the statement of managers accompanying the Strom Thurmond National Defense Authorization Act for 1999 (H. Rept. 105–736) required the Department of Defense (DOD) to submit a report on the potential SSBN-to-SSGN conversion no later than March 1, 1999. Both the Senate report accompanying S.1059 (S. Rept 106–50) and the House report accompanying H.140 (H. Rept. 106–162) noted that the Department had been negligent in meeting the required reporting deadline.

The conferees agree to authorize an increase of $13.0 million in PE 63563N to preserve the option for converting four SSBNs.

Subsequent to passage of both the Senate bill and the House amendment, the Office of the Secretary of Defense (OSD) submitted the SBN-to-SSGN report, which noted the following:

(1) A force of 14 Ohio class SSBN is sufficient to meet U.S. national security requirements under START II, and four of the 18 SSBNs now operating will not be needed to support operational strategic nuclear missions. Therefore, current DOD plans include inactivating the four oldest Trident SSBNs in fiscal years 2003 and 2004, when they would otherwise have been scheduled for refueling and overhaul.

(2) The Department has not budgeted nor programmed any funds for conversion of SSBNs to SSGNs.

(3) A comprehensive analysis of any potential additional contribution that SSGNs could provide relative to current and programmed capabilities is necessary to reach definitive conclusions regarding the SSGNs' cost and operational effectiveness.

(4) The net cost of converting four SSBNs to SSGN configuration is estimated at $1.6 billion, exclusive of reactor core cost. Compliance with START I Conversion or Elimination (C/E) protocols would increase the cost to between $2.7 billion and $3.2 billion, exclusive of reactor core costs.

(5) Preliminary design work on a conversion must commence three years in advance of a conversion start date, and detail design and pre-conversion fabrication must commence two years in advance of a conversion start date.

(6) Conversion must be consistent with U.S. obligations under the current START I Treaty, the pending START II Treaty, and a planned future START III Treaty.

(7) Areas that require additional study or analysis to better understand the implications and benefits of the SSBN-to-SSGN conversion include: arms control issues (including the cost of compliance with START I C/E protocols, and the effects of SSGN conversion on nuclear force structure under future nuclear arms control treaties), attack of time critical targets, in-theater SSGN configuration changes, Special Operations Forces call-for-fire support, and Tomahawk inventory requirements.

If the decision is made to retire SSBN submarines as a result of arms control agreements, the conferees believe that DOD should consider the one time, near-term opportunity Trident SSBN-to-SSGN conversion presents to the United States. The conferees believe, however, that DOD needs to complete the studies and analysis identified in items (3) and (7) above before committing to a full conversion program. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to initiate the arms control studies and cost and operational effectiveness analysis required to provide the basis for a defense acquisition milestone decision to proceed with an SSBN-to-SSGN conversion program.

Because preliminary design work must begin three years before the start of any conversion program as noted in the Department's report, the conferees agree to authorize an increase of $13.0 million in PE 63563N to preserve the option for converting the four SSBNs. The conferees emphasize these actions should be consistent with the requirements in this Act and should not detract in any way from the overall U.S. deterrent posture.

In a related matter, the Defense Department has been stating to Congress that it would conclude a review of requirements for attack submarine forces since last year. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to report to the congressional defense committees not later than February 1, 2000, the results of this ongoing study/review of attack submarine force structure established by the Quadrennial Defense Review. The conferees note that a Trident submarine converted to SSGN configuration could be capable of supporting the attack submarine force in performing a number of missions for the regional commanders in chief. The conferees direct the Secretary to include in his report the implications for meeting attack submarine requirements of converting 4 SSBNs to the SSGN configuration.

The conferees agree to authorize an increase of $6.0 million in PE 35204N, $3.0 for the TCS ground station and $3.0 million for MSAG.

The conferees reiterate their support for the operation of the SIL and continued development of the MUSE. The conferees also believe the SIL and MUSE support all service UAV developments and exercise support, and therefore all services should support their operation. The conferees understand that $1.5 million of the fiscal year 2000 TCS request is to fund SIL developments supporting the TCS program. The conferees expect the Department to fund any remaining fiscal year 2000 and future year requirements. Elsewhere in this report, the conferees have recommended shifting $45.9 million from Army procurement of tactical UAVs to research and development of tactical UAVs. The conferees encourage the Army to use SIL/MUSE support in executing the Army's fiscal year 2000 tactical UAV development effort.

Ballistic Missile Defense Organization funding and programmatic guidance

The budget request included approximately $3.3 billion for the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization (BMDO) for research, development, test, and evaluation (RDT&E), and procurement.

The Senate bill would authorize an increase of $399.0 million for BMDO.

The House amendment would authorize an increase of $138.5 million for BMDO. In addition, the House amendment would authorize an increase of $50.0 million in Navy RDT&E for radar upgrades associated with the Navy Theater Wide program, and would transfer $278.6 million from Air Force RDT&E to BMDO RDT&E for the Space Based Infrared System.

The conferees' recommended funding allocations for BMDO are summarized in the following table. Additional programmatic and funding guidance is also provided below.

Support technology

The conferees continue to support BMDO's wide bandgap electronics material development program. Higher speed and higher temperature operation afforded by wide bandgap electronic materials could enhance the miniaturization and functionality of advanced sensors and processing systems for space-based ballistic missile defense (BMD) sensors and ground-based radar systems. The conferees recommend an increase of $14.0 million in PE 62173C to support this important activity. Of these funds, $10.0 million shall be available to capitalize on existing accomplishments in gallium nitride through research, development, and transition into early device application.

The conferees continue to support research and development activities in the area of high frequency surface wave radar (HFSWR) technology and recommend an increase of $5.0 million in PE 62173C to continue this important effort.

The conferees continue to support the Atmospheric Interceptor Technology (AIT) program to develop advanced interceptors with potential applications for a range of theater missile defense (TMD) programs. The conferees recommend an increase of $30.0 million in PE 63173C to continue the AIT program and directs that, of this amount, $2.0 million be utilized to develop advanced integrated missile structures and airframes. The conferees encourage the expeditious completion of the Patriot PAC–3 multi-frequency generator effort, which is being undertaken as part of the AIT program.

The conferees have supported BMDO's efforts to evaluate innovative and low cost launch concepts, especially those utilizing pressure-fed rocket engine technology. The conferees recommend an increase of $5.0 million in PE 63173C to support the Scorpius concept and an increase of $5.0 million in PE 63173C to support the Excalibur concept. In addition, the conferees recommend an increase of $5.0 million for low cost launch technology, including Scorpius, in PE 63401F.

National Missile Defense

The budget request included $836.5 million in PE 63871C for National Missile Defense (NMD).

The Senate bill would approve the budget request for NMD.

The House amendment would authorize an increase of $15.0 million for target launch operations and target launch vehicles.

The conferees agree to authorize an increase of $15.0 million for target launch operations and target launch vehicles. In addition, as addressed elsewhere in this report, the conferees agree to authorize an increase of $15.7 million in military construction for NMD.

The conferees are pleased that the Administration has decided to fully fund development and procurement of a limited National Missile Defense (NMD) system. The conferees commend the Secretary of Defense for his leadership in securing the necessary funding increase and in recognizing the fact that the threat is expected to justify deployment of an NMD system. The conferees believe that BMDO and the Navy should also begin to evaluate options for supplementing the initial ground based NMD architecture with sea-based assets, including an upgraded version of the Navy's Theater Wide theater missile defense system. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to conduct a follow-on study to supplement the analysis that was included in the 1998 report entitled Utility of Sea-Based Assets to National Missile Defense. This report shall address the engineering steps that would be needed to develop a sea-based NMD system to supplement the ground-based NMD system. The study should evaluate requirements, performance benefits, design trade-offs, operational impacts, and refined cost estimates. The conferees direct the Secretary to provide a report to the congressional defense committees by March 15, 2000, on this follow-on effort.

Theater High Altitude Area Defense (THAAD) System

The budget request included $527.9 million for THAAD demonstration and validation (Dem/Val) and $83.8 million for THAAD engineering and manufacturing development (EMD). The conferees continue to support the development, production, and fielding of THAAD as a matter of highest priority. As addressed elsewhere in this report, the conferees do not support BMDO's revised upper tier acquisition strategy. The conferees believe that decisions regarding the THAAD schedule and budget should be determined based on the performance of the THAAD test program and not an artificial competition with the Navy Theater Wide system. The conferees recommend no funds in PE 64861C for THAAD EMD, but strongly support rapid progression of the THAAD program into the EMD phase of the program. If the THAAD interceptor missile achieves a second successful intercept test, and if the Secretary exercises the waiver authority provided elsewhere in this Act to enter EMD after two successful interceptor tests, the conferees strongly endorse the use of funds appropriated pursuant to section 102 of division B, title I, chapter 1 of Public Law 105–277, to support THAAD EMD activities. In addition, the conferees support the use of such funds to advance the THAAD battle management/command, control, and communications (BMC3) system and radar programs into EMD at the earliest possible date. The conferees also agree to authorize the use of funds authorized to be appropriated for THAAD Dem/Val for purposes of advancing the THAAD system or any of its major subsystems into EMD, to the extent that such funds are not needed to complete the Dem/Val phase of the program.

Navy Theater Wide

The conferees continue to support the Navy Theater Wide (NTW) program. The conferees urge the Secretary of Defense to accelerate this important development program to the extent permitted by the pace of technology development. The conferees are concerned that necessary radar improvements have not kept up with developments in the NTW interceptor missile system. Therefore, the conferees recommend an increase of $50.0 million for continuation of the Navy's competitive development of an advanced radar for theater missile defense. The conferees note that, despite being informed that the NTW program was fully funded in the fiscal year 2000 budget request, neither the Navy nor BMDO requested funding for the development of the radar necessary for the NTW system. The conferees expect future budget requests to include funding required for all aspects of the NTW program, including radar development. The conferees also recommend an increase of $40.0 million for NTW acceleration, for an overall increase of $90.0 million in PE 63868C.

BMD technical operations

The conferees support the efforts being performed at the Army Space and Missile Defense Command's Advanced Research Center (ARC). The ARC continues to be a valuable tool in support of the Army's development of both theater and national missile defense systems. Therefore, the conferees recommend an increase of $3.0 million in PE 63874C for support of the ARC.

The conferees understand that BMDO is leveraging commercial internet technologies to improve the utilization of data that is now dispersed among several data centers. The conferees believe that upgrading these centers and establishing a seamless, wide bandwidth information infrastructure between the centers would allow access by the entire BMD community, resulting in significant efficiencies. The conferees believe that such a network would allow distributed BMD modeling and simulation, including hardware-in-the-loop simulations, and would enhance flexibility to meet evolving threats more rapidly. Therefore, the conferees recommend an increase of $10.0 million in PE 63874C for development of a wide bandwidth information infrastructure to link current data centers as well as specific applications to take full advantage of such an infrastructure.

BMD targets

The conferees are concerned that current TMD surrogate targets do not sufficiently represent ballistic missile threats based on liquid fuel engines. Therefore, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to begin development of a new liquid fueled target, or family of targets. To support this effort, the conferees recommend an increase of $5.0 million in PE 63872C.

Patriot PAC–3

The conferees remain concerned by the cost growth and schedule delays in the Patriot PAC–3 program, but understand that the technical difficulties that caused these problems have been resolved. The conferees note that the most recent flight test of the PAC–3 system was successful and that the program is scheduled to fly again shortly. If the next flight test is successful, the PAC–3 system will be authorized to proceed into low-rate initial production, assuming sufficient funds are available. The conferees approved a reprogramming of $60.0 million in fiscal year 1999 funds from procurement to help offset funding problems in the EMD program. The conferees note that even with this reprogramming, the EMD program remains under-funded in the fiscal year 2000 budget request by $152.0 million. In addition, the fiscal year 1999 reprogramming has left a $60.0 million shortfall in fiscal year 2000 budget request for procurement, which would preclude commencement of low-rate initial production during fiscal year 2000. Therefore, the conferees recommend an increase of $152.0 million in PE 64865C for PAC–3 EMD, and an increase of $60.0 million in Procurement, Defense-wide, for PAC–3 procurement.

Navy Area

The budget request included $268.3 million in PE 64867C for Navy Area EMD, and $55.0 million in Defense-wide Procurement, for Standard Missile II Block IVA production.

The Senate bill approved the budget request.

The House amendment transferred $55.0 million from Defense-wide Procurement to Navy Area EMD to cover cost growth in the EMD program.

The conferees agree to approve the budget request of $55.0 million for Navy Area procurement, and an increase of $41.8 million in PE 64867C for Navy Area EMD.

The conferees remain concerned by schedule delays and cost growth in the Navy Area program. In particular, the conferees have been troubled by the Navy's failure to keep the relevant congressional committees informed of emerging technical problems in the Navy Area program, and related Navy programs. Given the priority of the Navy Area program, the conferees support increased funds in fiscal year 2000 to compensate for cost growth, but the conferees insist that the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization and the Navy fully fund the revised baseline schedule in the Future Years Defense Program.

Russian-American Observation Satellites program

The conferees understand that BMDO, working with the Office of the Secretary of Defense, plans to make $16.0 million of current and/or prior year funds available for the Russian-American Observation Satellites (RAMOS) program. The conferees agree to authorize the use of $16.0 million for this purpose. The conferees understand that RAMOS is an important element of U.S.-Russian threat reduction efforts.

Missile defense models and simulations

The conferees are concerned that there appears to be insufficient consistency in modeling and simulation of missile defense systems and architectures. The conferees believe that such consistency is necessary to assure balanced and accurate assessment of missile defense systems. The conferees direct the Directors of BMDO and the Joint Theater Air and Missile Defense Organization to ensure that common standards for missile defense modeling and simulation are developed and adhered to throughout the Department of Defense.

Weapons of mass destruction related technologies

The budget request included $203.5 million for weapons of mass destruction related technologies (PE 62715BR) of the Defense Threat Reduction Agency (DTRA).

The Senate bill would authorize an increase of $5.0 million in PE 62715BR to continue development and testing of Deep Digger.

The House amendment would authorize an increase of $3.0 million in PE 62715BR to continue development of thermionic power conversion technology.

The conferees agree to authorize an increase of $8.0 million for Deep Digger and thermionic power conversion technology.

Complex systems design

The budget request included $10.9 million for special technical support in PE 63704D8Z, but contained no funding for research and development associated with complex systems design.

The Senate bill would authorize an increase of $5.0 million in PE 63704D8Z for complex systems design.

The House amendment would authorize an identical increase.

The conferees agree to authorize an increase of $5.0 million in PE 63704D8Z for complex systems design, and designate it a program of special interest.

The conferees agree that the complex systems design initiative offers the potential for fundamental, revolutionary improvement to the design process that can result in a monumental improvement in weapons system acquisition efficiency. Until now, only discrete portions of systems development have been integrated, but never the entire process, from establishment of requirements to delivery of the system. However, it appears that technology now exists to reach the long-standing goal of a truly integrated interactive, design process.

Joint warfighting program

The budget request included $7.9 million in PE 63727D8Z for joint warfighting program requirements. The budget request also included $41.8 million in PE 63727N for joint warfighting experimentation.

The Senate bill would authorize an increase of $10.0 million in PE 63727D8Z to support additional joint experimentation requirements.

The House amendment would authorize an increase of $8.0 million in PE 63727N for joint experimentation.

The conferees agree to authorize an increase of $31.9 million in PE 63727D8Z for joint experimentation activities. This represents an increase of $10.0 million for joint experimentation activities, and a transfer of $21.8 million in joint experimentation funds from the Navy program element into the Defense-Wide Joint Warfighting program element.

Aging aircraft sustainment technology

The budget request did not include funding for the aging aircraft sustainment technology program.

The Senate bill would authorize the budget request.

The House amendment would authorize an increase of $3.0 million in PE 78011S for the aging aircraft sustainment technology program.

The conferees understand that this program is to be initiated in fiscal year 2001 in the generic logistics research and development technology demonstration program (PE 63712S). The conferees agree to authorize an increase of $3.0 million in PE 78011S in order to begin the aging aircraft sustainment technology program in fiscal year 2000.

Special operations tactical systems development

The budget request included $106.7 million for special operations tactical system development activities.

The Senate bill would authorize an increase of $9.0 million to support production line modifications necessary to install aircraft survivability equipment on CV–22 aircraft during the production process in lieu of existing retrofit plans. The Senate bill would also authorize an increase of $11.6 million in PE 160408BB for a classified activity.

The House amendment would authorize an increase of $21.0 million for the following:

(1) $4.0 million for small craft propulsion systems improvements;

(2) $8.0 million for advanced SEAL delivery systems; and

(3) $9.0 million for CV–22 aircraft survivability equipment production enhancements.

The conferees agree to authorize an increase of $50.7 million in PE 1160404BB. Of this amount, $9.0 million is to support insertion of aircraft survivability equipment on CV–22 aircraft during the production process, $4.0 million is for small craft propulsion system improvements, $11.6 million is for the classified program as identified in the Senate bill, and $26.1 million is for Advanced SEAL delivery system efforts, discussed elsewhere in this report.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Aeronautical test facilities

The House report accompanying H.R. 1401 (H. Rept. 106–162) expressed the belief that, in order for the United States to retain world leadership in the field of aeronautics, it must optimize the utilization and care of existing aerodynamic and air breathing propulsion test facilities that support the missions of the Department of Defense (DOD), the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA), and the domestic aeronautics industry. The House report stated that the Department and NASA should establish an integrated national strategy for the management of U.S. aerodynamic, aerothermodynamic, and aeropropulsion test facilities, and for investment in the test infrastructure and technology for core national facilities and associated computational facilities, including the maintenance and modernization of key commercial aeronautical test facilities.

The conferees agree with the guidance contained in the House report and the direction to the Secretary of Defense, in coordination with the Director, NASA, to submit a report to the congressional defense committees with the President's fiscal year 2001 budget request that provides the status of the interagency agreement for establishing a National Aeronautical Test Alliance and the plans for implementation of the agreement. The conferees further agree that the Secretary and the Director should place a high priority on developing, in coordination with the U.S. aerospace industry, a national plan for developing and maintaining essential U.S. aeronautical testing capabilities and funding recommendations for support and modernization.

Aerostructures

In recent years, the Department of Defense has pursued significant cost reduction efforts in the development and production of polymer matrix composites (PMC) structures for aerospace applications. The improved performance of these PMC structures in military aircraft applications has driven the manufacturing technology and process programs to continue to look for affordability improvements. The conferees are aware of collaborative efforts between the automotive industry and the aluminum industry, which has significantly improved performance while reducing cost. With aircraft structure representing approximately 25 percent of the cost of an aircraft, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to provide a report to the congressional defense committees on potential applications of aluminum aerostructures as a means of reducing production and life-cycle costs of military aviation platforms. This report is to due to the congressional defense committees 180 days after the enactment of this Act.

Bioenvironmental research

The Chief of Naval Operation's Executive Board on Oceanography tasked the Office of Naval Research (ONR) to meet the challenge of understanding the littoral battle sphere by employing new means and methods. As a result of this tasking ONR has placed a significant emphasis on understanding all aspects of the Surf Zone/Very Shallow Water environment.

The Bioenvironmental Hazards Research program (BHRP) of Tulane/Xavier Center for Bioenvironmental Research (CBR) has produced long-range science and technology research projects that provide the fundamental research to advance and improve the environmental intelligence of these specific naval mission requirements. The integrated BHRP on biosensors and biomarkers are focused on both human and ecological exposure within model ecosystems, as found in the littoral regions of the world. The CBR is developing biosensor/biomarker devices that will monitor potential and actual exposure of military personnel in the field to harmful chemical or biological agents.

By employing a variety of innovative biologically based receptors, the biosensors being developed through the BHRP program will detect defense-related hazardous materials, such as heavy metals, organophosphates, and other compounds, including mixed low-level radioactive wastes, which have been identified as carceninogenic, endocrine disrupting, or toxic. These receptors use biological reactions to assess, quantify, and report the presence of environmental contaminants.

The conferees strongly support the work being performed in the BHRP program to enhance the capability of naval forces to conduct amphibious operations in the 21st Century. The conferees recognize the significant body research and scientific advances provided through the BHRP program at CBR. The conferees encourage the Chief of Naval Research to continue to leverage this partnership between CBR, ONR, the Naval Research Laboratory, the Naval Oceanographic Office, and industry to provide the mission requirement tools to meet these critical environmental needs of the fleet.

Genomics-based therapeutics

The Department of Defense (DOD) is responsible for the acute, trauma and battlefield medical treatment of its fighting forces, as well as the routine medical care of its active personnel, their dependents, and the military retired community. The Department also has the task of ensuring that it has the tools available to treat military first response forces and victims of radiation, chemical and biological incidents resulting from use of weapons of mass destruction.

The conferees are aware of the scientific progress in the field of genomics-based therapeutics. Within the last two years, the biopharmaceutical industry has achieved significant advances in converting genomic knowledge into gene and protein-based therapies with the potential to prevent, treat, and cure a variety of acute and traumatic conditions, as well as chronic diseases. These advances have a wide ranging applicability for the many patient populations under the purview of the Department.

With recent congressional focus on DOD's preparedness to deal with the threat posed by weapons of mass destruction, it is essential that the Department investigate the potential of genomics-based therapeutics to prevent and treat damage to the eyes, skin, mucositis, airways, lung and bladder. It is understood that genomics-based therapies may offer new modalities with the potential to mediate immune responses, particularly as vaccine adjuvants and B cell immune stimulants, and to treat malignancies arising from radiation, chemical, or biological exposure. Therefore, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to report to the congressional defense committees on potential applications of genomics-based technologies to address defense needs. This report is due to the congressional defense committees 180 days.after the enactment of this Act.

Marine mammal research

The budget request included $361.1 million in PE 61153N for the Navy's defense research sciences program.

The Senate bill would authorize the budget request.

The House amendment would authorize use of $500,000 for continuation of the Navy's cooperative marine mammal research program.

The House recedes.

The conferees note the significant contributions of the marine mammal research program to the Navy's work in undersea research. In the statement of manager's accompanying the the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1998, the conferees directed the Secretary of the Navy to submit a report that would include an assessment of the progress of the research, its technological implications to Navy sonar requirements, and the Navy's plan for the program's future. The conferees cite the program's highlights and accomplishments, including environmental compliance, biological sonar, and biomemetic underwater vehicle design. The conferees further recognize the unique conceptual byproducts of sonar engineering derived from this type of research, as well as the promise of additional anti-submarine warfare and mine countermeasure capabilities. Contributions cited in the report of interest to the conferees included the development of novel sonar engineering concepts, signal processing, buried mine detection, and improved target detection in underwater environments. Finally, the conferees note the Navy's intention, as expressed in the report, to maintain funding for marine mammal programs at approximately $2.0 million annually.

The conferees recognize the importance of continued marine signals and acoustics research, particularly to address the high noise and cluttered conditions known to exist in shallow, littoral areas. The conferees encourage the Secretary of the Navy to continue funding for the cooperative marine mammal research program.

Volumetrically controlled technologies

The conferees are encouraged by the progress made at the U.S. Army Medical Research and Materiel Command (USAMRMC) to develop a three dimensional volumetrically controlled maufactured (VCM) artifical hip. It is understood that the methodology being developed may allow precision control of the intrinsic properties of syntheric materials. As a result of the USAMRMC program, the mathematical foundation for advancing synthetic material development from two-dimensional processes to real-time three dimensional manufacturing may be accomplished. This development has the potential to eliminate the current mode of failure of conventional composite materials, namely delamination and polymer-fiber interface breakdown. Although this project is primarily focused on an artifical hip, VCM's potential applications have ramifications in other manufacturing areas including aerospace. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense, through the office of the Director for Defense Research and Engineering, to explore the USAMRMC program for potential applications to meet defense needs.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Authorization of Appropriations

Authorization of Appropriations (secs. 201–202)

The Senate bill contained provisions (secs. 201–202) that would authorize the recommended fiscal year 2000 funding levels for all research, development, test, and evaluation accounts.

The House amendment contained similar provisions.

The conference agreement includes these provisions.

Subtitle B—Program Requirements, Restrictions, and Limitations

Collaborative program to evaluate and demonstrate advanced technologies for advanced capability combat vehicles (sec. 211)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 211) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to establish and carry out an evaluation and competitive demonstration of concepts for advanced capability combat vehicles.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees concur on the importance of initiating a future combat vehicle program and direct the Secretary of the Army and the Director of the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA) to enter into a memorandum of agreement that would provide for the following activities:

(1) consideration and evaluation of technologies having the potential to enable the development of advanced capability combat vehicles that are significantly superior to the existing M1 series of tanks in terms of capability for combat, survival, support, and deployment, including but not limited to the following technologies:

(a) weapon systems using electromagnetic power, directed energy, and kinetic energy;

(b) propulsion systems using hybrid electric drive;

(c) mobility systems using active and semi-active suspension and wheeled-vehicle suspension;

(d) protection system using signature management, lightweight materials, and full-spectrum active protection;

(e) advanced robotics, displays, man-machine interfaces and embedded training;

(f) advanced sensory systems and advanced systems for combat identification, tactical navigation, communication, systems status monitoring, and reconnaissance;

(g) revolutionary methods of manufacturing combat vehicles;

(2) incorporation of the most promising such technologies into demonstration models.

(3) competitive testing and evaluation of such demonstration models; and

(4) identification of the most promising such demonstration models within a period of time to enable preparation of a full development program capable of beginning by fiscal year 2007.

The conferees consider this program an item of special interest and direct the Secretary of the Army and the Director of DARPA to submit to the congressional defense committees a joint report on the implementation of the program under subsection (a) of this provision.

The report should contain the following:

(1) description of the memorandum of agreement referred to in subsection (b) of this provision.

(2) schedule for the program;

(3) identification of the funding required for fiscal year 2001 and for the future-years defense program to carry out the program;

(4) description and assessment of the acquisition strategy for combat vehicles planned by the Secretary of the Army that would sustain the existing force of M-1 series tanks, together with a complete identification of all operation, support, ownership, and other costs required to carry out such a strategy through the year 2030; and

(5) description and assessment of one or more acquisition strategies for combat vehicles, alternative to the strategy referred to in paragraph (4), that would develop a force of advanced capability combat vehicles significantly superior to the existing force of M1 series tanks and, for each such alternative acquisition strategy, an estimate of the funding required to carry out such a strategy.

Sense of Congress regarding defense science and technology program (sec. 212)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 213) that would express the sense of Congress that the Secretary of Defense has failed to comply with the funding objective for the defense science and technology program, as required by section 214 of the Strom Thurmond National Defense Authorization Act of Fiscal Year 1999. The provision would reiterate the sense of Congress that the Department increase the budget for defense science and technology within each military department for the Future Year Defense Program for that program for the preceding year that is at least two percent above the rate of inflation. The provision would also require the President to certify, if the funding objectives are not met, that the budget does not jeopardize the stability of the technology base or increase the risk of failure to maintain technological superiority in future weapons systems.

The Senate bill did not contain a similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of Defense to make the certification and would require the Defense Science Board submit to the Secretary and Congress a report assessing the effects such failure to comply is likely to have on defense science and technology and the national defense.

Micro-satellite technology development program (sec. 213)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 212) that would authorize an increase of $25.0 million for micro-satellite technology development and require the Secretary of Defense to develop a micro-satellite technology development plan.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize an increase of $10.0 million for micro-satellite technology development. The conferees address the micro-satellite technology development plan elsewhere in this conference report.

Space control technology (sec. 214)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 213) that would authorize an increase of $10.0 million for space control technology development pursuant to the Department of Defense Space Control Technology Plan of 1999 and $41.0 million for Army space control technology development, including the Kinetic Energy Anti-Satellite (KE-ASAT) program and related technologies.

The House amendment would authorize an increase of $10.0 million for the KE-ASAT program.

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize an increase of $5.0 million for space control technology development pursuant to the Department of Defense Space Control Technology Plan of 1999, and $10.0 million for Army space control technology development, including the KE-ASAT program and related technologies.

Space Maneuver Vehicle program (sec. 215)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 214) that would authorize an increase of $35.0 million for the development and acquisition of an Air Force X-40 flight test article to support the joint Air Force and National Aeronautics and Space Administration X-37 program and to meet the unique needs of the Air Force Space Maneuver Vehicle program.

The House amendment recommended an increase of $5.0 million for military spaceplane development.

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize an increase of $25.0 million for the development and acquisition of an Air Force X-40 flight test article to support the joint Air Force and National Aeronautics and Space Administration X-37 program and to meet the unique needs of the Air Force Space Maneuver Vehicle program.

Manufacturing technology program (sec. 216)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 215) that would strike the mandatory cost share requirements in the Manufacturing Technology (MANTECH) program in section 2525 in title 10 United States Code and emphasize the program's focus on high risk, defense essential requirements, as well as repair and re-manufacturing solutions in support of depots, air logistics centers, and shipyards.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 212) that would amend section 2525 of title 10, United States Code, to include as one of the purposes of the defense manufacturing technology program the development of advanced manufacturing technologies and processes that address broad defense-related manufacturing inefficiencies and requirements. The provision would also remove the requirement that the Secretary of Defense establish percentage goals for cost sharing in the program.

The House recedes with an amendment that would establish as the overall purpose of the program the development and application of advanced manufacturing technologies and processes to reduce acquisition and support costs, and manufacturing and repair cycle times for defense weapons systems. The provision would emphasize the program's focus on the development and application of advanced manufacturing technologies and processes that are essential to national defense, including repair and remanufacturing operations, in support of systems commands, depots, air logistics centers, and shipyards. The provision would also require the participation of the prospective users of the technology in the establishment of requirements for, and the periodic review of advanced manufacturing technologies or processes. The provision would require that each manufacturing technology project include an implementation plan for transition of the technology or process to the prospective use. The provision would strike the mandatory cost share requirements in the program and would provide that cost sharing be included as a factor in competitive procedures for evaluating proposals for manufacturing technology projects. The provision would also include an assessment of program effectiveness, cost sharing, and technology and process implementation plans in the annual update of the program's five-year plan.

Revision to limitations on high altitude endurance unmanned vehicle program (sec. 217)

The budget request included $70.8 million in PE 35205F for endurance unmanned aerial vehicles (EUAVs).

The Senate bill would authorize a decrease of $13.2 million, as follows:

(1) a decrease of $7.2 million in Global Hawk because of delays in the testing program; and

(2) a decrease of $6.0 million in Dark Star because of program cancellation.

The House amendment would authorize an increase of $25.0 million for Global Hawk to resume the user evaluation and testing slowed by the loss of an air vehicle and to sustain the industrial base.

The conferees agree to an increase of $25.0 million for Global Hawk for the purposes outlined in the House report accompanying H.R. 1401 (H. Rept. 106–162), offset by a reduction of $6.0 million for Dark Star cancellation. The conferees further agree to authorize the Air Force to procure up to two additional advanced concept technology demonstration air vehicles.

Subtitle C—Ballistic Missile Defense

Space Based Infrared System (SBIRS) Low program (sec. 231)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 231) that would establish additional program elements for ballistic missile defense (BMD) programs, including for upper tier theater missile defense, the Space Based Infrared System (SBIRS) Low and SBIRS High.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would: (1) designate BMD as the primary mission of SBIRS Low; (2) provide the Director of Ballistic Missile Defense Organization the authority to approve all system level technical requirements for SBIRS Low, any change to the SBIRS Low baseline schedule, and any change to the SBIRS Low baseline budget; (3) ensure that non-BMD missions receive proper priority to the extent that such missions do not increase technical or schedule risk; (4) transfer the management and budgeting of funds for the SBIRS Low program from the Tactical Intelligence and Related Activities aggregation to a nonintelligence budget activity of the Air Force; and (5) require that the system level technical requirements be defined not later than July 1, 2000.

Although the budget request for the SBIRS Low program included funds in both the SBIRS Low Demonstration and Validation program element (PE63441F) and the SBIRS Low Engineering and Manufacturing Development program element (PE64442F), the Air Force has requested that funds be consolidated in the EMD program element. While the conferees support the proposal to consolidate the SBIRS Low budget into a single program element, since the currently approved baseline schedule for SBIRS Low does not include a milestone II decision until fiscal year 2002, the conferees do not believe that funds should be placed in the EMD program element at this time. Therefore, the conferees agree to authorize the SBIRS Low budget request of $229.0 million in PE 63441F.

Theater missile defense upper tier acquisition strategy (sec. 232)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 221) that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish an acquisition strategy for the Navy Theater Wide system and the Theater High Altitude Area Defense (THAAD) system that:

(1) retains funding for both upper tier systems in separate, independently managed program elements throughout the Future Years Defense Program;

(2) bases funding decisions and program schedules for each upper tier system on the performance of those systems independent of one another; and

(3) seeks to accelerate the deployment of both upper tier systems to the maximum extent practicable.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees do not support the proposed change to the acquisition strategy of the Defense Department for upper tier theater missile defense programs. Under the proposed strategy, a decision would be made by December 2000, to select a lead upper tier system so that funding for the two programs could be concentrated on a lead system. The funding would be consolidated in a single program element in fiscal year 2002. This approach contradicts congressional guidance from previous years and puts the two upper tier systems into an unnecessary competition for the same resources. The conferees note that the statement of managers accompanying the Strom Thurmond National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1999 (H. Rept. 105–736) clearly stated that ". . . the THAAD missile and the Navy Upper Tier missile should not be viewed as competing systems." Though overlapping to a degree, the two upper tier systems serve fundamentally different sets of equally valid requirements and do so with fundamentally different technological approaches. The conferees continue to believe that the United States has valid requirements for both systems, and that both systems should be deployed as soon as practicable.

Acquisition strategy for Theater High Altitude Area Defense (THAAD) system (sec. 233)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 222) that would repeal subsection (a) of section 236 of the Strom Thurmond National Defense Act for Fiscal Year 1999 (Public Law 105–261).

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would amend section 236 of the Strom Thurmond National Defense Act for Fiscal Year 1999 to: (1) require the Secretary of Defense to take appropriate steps to assure continued independent review of the Theater High Altitude Area Defense (THAAD) program; (2) require the Secretary of Defense to proceed with the milestone approval process to allow the THAAD radar and battle management/command, control and communications (BM/C3) system to proceed into the engineering and manufacturing development (EMD) phase of development without regard to the stage of development of the THAAD interceptor missile; and (3) allow the Secretary of Defense, following a second successful THAAD interceptor test, to waive the requirement to have three successful intercept tests before the THAAD missile enters EMD. Nevertheless, the conferees expect the currently approved Demonstration/Validation flight test program to be completed.

Space Based Laser program (sec. 234)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 223) that would establish a structure for the Space Based Laser (SBL) program, including a program baseline for an integrated flight experiment (IFX) and an ongoing activity for developing an objective system design.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

The conferees note the recommendation contained in the January 18, 1999, report of the SBL Independent Review Team (IRT) that the IFX include "[a] ground facility to provide an end-to-end system checkout before launch—to be operational and completely checked out at least two years before the planned IFX launch date." Since the IRT found the existing facilities to be inadequate for the integrated ground test of the IFX, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Air Force, in coordination with the Director of the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization (BMDO), to begin design of the SBL test facility and agree to authorize $10.0 million for this purpose.

The conferees believe that funds made available for the SBL program in fiscal year 2000 must be focused on development of an IFX baseline and necessary supporting technology. The conferees believe that the schedule laid out by the Air Force for an IFX launch in 2012 is not sufficiently aggressive. The conferees understand that the SBL Joint Venture industry partnership will develop an SBL baseline schedule by March, 2000, and that this schedule will include an earlier launch date, consistent with the requirements of this Act. The conferees will assess the adequacy of this baseline schedule once completed. The conferees believe that the Air Force must minimize the amount of funding utilized for program management and studies that do not directly support development of the IFX to ensure that the maximum amount possible is directed to the SBL Joint Venture's efforts to develop the IFX program baseline and the technology needed to implement that baseline program. The conferees also believe that spending on facility upgrades at the Capistrano high energy laser test facility must be limited to those investments needed to support research and development activities that must occur prior to completion of a new integrated test facility. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Air Force in consultation with the Director of BMDO to develop a plan for transition of SBL research, development, test, and evaluation to the new integrated test facility.

The conferees note that the Air Force has expressed strong support for the development of deployable optics for the SBL system, but has also indicated that such a development may require significant risk reduction activities. The 1999 SBL–IRT report endorsed inclusion of deployable optics on the IFX. Although the conferees take no position on whether deployable optics must be demonstrated on the IFX or will be needed for an operational system, the conferees note that additional investment will be required in the near-term to evaluate deployable optics and retire risk associated with such optics development. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Air Force and the Director of BMDO, in consultation with the SBL Joint Venture, to carefully assess this matter in developing the IFX program baseline.

The conferees note that the Secretary of Defense has yet to submit reports on the SBL program required by the statement of managers accompanying the National Defense Authorization Acts for Fiscal Year 1996 and Fiscal Year 1998. The conferees direct the Secretary to complete the SBL report required by this Act in a timely manner. The SBL reporting requirement contained in this Act supersedes those required in prior years.

Criteria for progression of airborne laser program (sec. 235)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 224) that would establish certain criteria for progression of the airborne laser program through the program definition and risk reduction phase of development and into the engineering and manufacturing development phase of development.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Sense of Congress regarding ballistic missile defense technology funding (sec. 236)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 225) that would express a sense of Congress regarding the adequacy of ballistic missile defense technology funding and that the Secretary of Defense should submit a report on this matter.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would express the sense of Congress regarding the adequacy of ballistic missile defense technology funding.

Report on national missile defense (sec. 237)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 226) that would require the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to Congress on the advantages or disadvantages of a two-site deployment of a ground-based national missile defense system.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Subtitle D—Research and Development for Long-Term Military Capabilities

Quadrennial report on emerging operational concepts (sec. 241)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 231) that would extend for an additional two years the requirement for the Secretary of Defense to provide an annual report on emerging operational concepts, organizational concepts, and acquisition strategies to address emerging technologies, emerging capabilities, and changes in the international order. The provision would require the Secretary to set forth the military capabilities that are necessary to meet the most significant threats that could be posed to the U.S. national security interests over the next three decades and to identify, in consultation with science and technology experts within the Department, the research and development challenges that must be met and the technological breakthroughs necessary to develop those capabilities.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the report to be submitted on March 1, 2000 and every four years thereafter. The conferees intend that the military capabilities and associated research and development challenges identified by the Secretary will serve as a benchmark for future science and technology investments, as provided in the Joint Warfighting Science and Technology Plan.

Technology area review and assessment (sec. 242)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 232) that would require the Secretary of Defense to provide the congressional defense committees with a summary of each technical area review and assessment in conjunction with the Joint Warfighting Science and Technology Plan submission.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Report by Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology (sec. 243)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 233) that would require the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology to report to the congressional defense committees on actions that the Department of Defense will take to ensure appropriate emphasis on revolutionary technology initiatives, sustain a high-quality national research base, ensure the coordinated development of joint technologies, identify and incorporate commercial technologies, effectively and efficiently manage the transition of new technologies into production, and provide appropriate education and training in technology issues to the Department's military leadership.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

DARPA program for award of competitive prizes to encourage development of advanced technologies (sec. 244)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 235) that would authorize the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA) to award competitive prizes for the development of advanced technologies for military applications. This program is expected to open the field of participation to a wider range of research and industrial activity in a field.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would sunset the authority after four years. The conferees direct DARPA to consult with the military services before setting the objectives for which the prizes would be awarded or the criteria for making those awards. The conferees expect DARPA to use the prize authority only in cases where it determines, in consultation with the military services, that it is likely to serve as a significant incentive to develop technologies that are of high value to military end users.

Additional pilot program for revitalizing Department of Defense laboratories (sec. 245)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 236) that would authorize a new pilot program to ensure that the defense laboratories can attract a balanced workforce of permanent and temporary personnel with an appropriate level of skills and experience, and can effectively compete in hiring processes to obtain the finest scientific talent.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would clarify the objective of the pilot authority to focus on improving the efficiency of research, development, test and evaluation activities.

Subtitle E—Other Matters

Development of Department of Defense laser master plan and execution of solid state laser program (sec. 251)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 241) that would require the Secretary of Defense to designate the Secretary of the Army as the Department of Defense executive agent for oversight of research, development, test, and evaluation of specified high energy laser technologies, and that would require that such activities be carried out through the Army Space and Missile Defense Command at the High Energy Laser Systems Test Facility at White Sands Missile Range, New Mexico.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would: (1) require the Secretary of Defense to develop a unified Department of Defense laser master plan; (2) require the Secretary of the Army to initiate a development program for solid state laser technologies; and (3) authorize an increase of $20.0 million to carry out the Army solid state laser technology development program. The conferees note that solid-state lasers, because of their compactness, lower weight, and less volatile power sources, offer great potential for a number of military applications. The conferees also believe that the technology is more mature than is widely understood.

Chemical laser development has progressed rapidly under Air Force supervision. Two ongoing chemical laser efforts, the Airborne Laser and the Space Based Laser programs, are currently funded at almost $500.0 million annually. However, solid-state laser development has lacked focus and the conferees understand that only $20.0 million to $30.0 million is spent annually across all services on these important technologies. The conferees believe that additional investment in solid state laser technologies could prove to have military utility within several years.

Because of the potential value of solid state lasers for land-based military uses, the conferees believe that the Secretary of the Army should pursue a concerted effort to identify viable solid-state laser technologies that have weapons potential, characterize technological obstacles currently inhibiting more rapid maturity, and initiate a solid state laser development program. The conferees further believe that the Secretary of Defense should maximize use of the existing Department of Defense high energy laser facilities and the expertise in solid state lasers at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, and other Department of Energy laboratories, in pursuing this initiative.

Report on Air Force distributed mission training (sec. 252)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 251) that would require the Secretary of the Air Force to submit a report on the implementation status of the distributed mission training program.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Testing of airblast and improvised explosives

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 216) that would authorize an increase of $4.0 million in PE 63122D for testing of airblast and improvised explosives.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees agree to authorize an increase of $4.0 million in PE 63122D for airblast and improvised explosives, as noted elsewhere in this conference report.

Use of working capital funds for financing research and development of the military departments

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 238) that would require all research, development, test, and evaluation activities and programs of the military departments be financed through the working-capital fund mechanism, effective upon enactment of this Act. The provision would also require the Under Secretary of Defense (Comptroller) to report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives on the status of implementation on April 1, 2000 and August 1, 2000.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees direct the Department of Defense to evaluate the potential for financing research, development, test and evaluation facilities through a working-capital fund financing mechanism and provide a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than September 30, 2000. This report shall include a detailed discussion of: the current method of financing research, development, test and evaluation facilities of the military services; a complete transition to working-capital fund financing for these facilities; and a mix of direct appropriations and working-capital fund financing for these facilities. Additional areas for discussion will include actions necessary to ensure a seamless transition to working-capital fund financing, the benefits and additional costs associated with the full cost recovery under working-capital fund financing, and methods to ensure that customer accounts are sufficiently funded to support full cost recovery under working-capital fund financing.

The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to establish regulations regarding the manner in which disputes in such cases will be resolved. These regulations should include specific instructions on how these concerns are to be addressed in the contract formulation process, including the extent to which private sector contractors will be held harmless in any case where a public sector facility fails to meet the terms of a subcontract under which it is performing work for the private sector, and thus the prime contractor is unable to meet the obligations of the contract with the Department of Defense.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees are concerned that Navy Morale, Welfare and Recreation funds may have suffered reduced dividends from the Navy Exchange Command as a result of the move of the Navy Exchange Command headquarters from Staten Island, New York, to Virginia Beach, Virginia. The conferees note that the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994 (Public Law 103-160) authorized the Navy to reimburse the Navy Exchange Command up to $10.0 million for expenses related to the move. The conferees urge the Secretary of the Navy to review the record of the costs of moving the Navy Exchange Command headquarters, the savings attributable to relocating to Virginia, and the dividends the Navy Exchange Command paid the Navy Morale, Welfare and Recreation fund. The conferees expect that the Secretary of the Navy, following this review, to reimburse the Navy Morale, Welfare and Recreation fund by the amount of dividends determined to have been denied to sailors and their families as a result of the move of the Navy Exchange Command headquarters.

TITLE V—MILITARY PERSONNEL POLICY

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Medical and physical accession and retention standards

Recognizing that the military services face significant challenges in both the recruitment and retention of sufficient personnel, the conferees support the range of creative and innovative programs that the military services are undertaking to solve recruiting and retention shortfalls. To that end, the conferees urge the Secretary of Defense to undertake a thorough review of the medical and physical standards by which the services adjudge a person's fitness for accession and retention. Persons with conditions heretofore considered disabling today make significant contributions in all walks of life. In urging the Secretary to undertake the review of accession and retention standards, the conferees want to examine the premise that persons with conditions previously considered disqualifying for entry into or retention in the military might now provide a source of qualified personnel to assist the military services in meeting manning requirements. However, the conferees acknowledge that service members must meet or exceed certain physical and medical standards to be able to fight and win the Nation's wars.

The section would also prohibit the use of the exemption from increasing the total numbers of general officers on active duty, and from increasing the numbers of four-star general officers by mandating that the exemptions be used to fill joint three-star positions that, without the exemption, would otherwise not be filled. Finally, the section would make permanent the requirement that each service secretary nominate a candidate to the Secretary of Defense to fill vacancies in four-star joint officer command positions.

The House recedes with an amendment that would include the clarification of certain limitations of the number of active-duty generals and flag officers.

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 514) that would extend the period of service of reserve component majors and lieutenant commanders following a second failure to be selected for promotion. The recommended provision would provide a reserve component major or lieutenant commander with twenty years of service, or less than six months to reach twenty years of service, a six month period to transition out of the service.

The section would also establish procedures for the continued employment of certain non-retirement eligible technicians in the Army or Air Force Reserve who had been hired on or before February 10, 1996, as well as for the reemployment and separation of non dual-status technicians hired subsequently.

The section would also make a non-dual status technician in the Army or Air Force Reserve ineligible for a voluntary personnel action involving a military technician (dual status) position. The section would define "voluntary personnel action" as one involving the hiring, entry, appointment, reassignment, or transfer into a military technician (dual status) position other than the one occupied by the non-dual status technician; or promotion in grade in a current position, if the non-dual status technician occupies a position which the Secretary of the Army or Air Force, as appropriate, has designated as requiring a military technician (dual status). The section would take effect one year after the date of enactment of this bill.

The section would create new early retirement criteria for any technician hired after February 10, 1996 who becomes a non-dual status technician. The new criteria would make a military technician (dual status) eligible for immediate retirement after completing 25 years of service, or after becoming 50 years of age and completing 20 years of service. Such revised retirement criteria would help to ensure the sustainment of the youthful, vigorous technician force that will be required in the 21st Century.

The section would also permit Army and Air Force Reserve technicians who qualify for the Civil Service Retirement System (CSRS) to be provided a disability retirement—something for which, heretofore, only National Guard technicians under CSRS were qualified.

If at any time after the effective dates the numerical limits are exceeded, the section would require that the Secretary of Defense take action to require the appropriate secretaries of the military services to immediately reduce the excess.

The section would also provide authority for the Secretary of the Army in school year 1999, 2000, and 2001 to vary the cadet end strengths from the statutory limit. The section would also repeal section 511, of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1992 (Public Law 102-190), add the strength limitations of that section to title 10, United States Code, and require that compliance with the cadet and midshipmen strength limitations will be measured annually as of the day before graduation for each of the service academies.

The amendment would also specify that the requirement for an officer to retire upon termination of a detail as Superintendent would become effective with the appointment of the next Superintendent at each academy.

The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff would designate up to 10 one-star and two-star positions to be filled for tours of duty in excess of 180 days only by reserve component general and flag officers. The designated positions would be considered joint duty assignments for the purposes of chapter 38 of title 10, United States Code. Reserve component officers filling these designated positions would not count against the number of general and flag officers on active duty or the limits on the distribution of officers within the general and flag officer grades. The 10 reserve component officers filling the designated positions would be in addition to those reserve component general and flag officers on active duty tours in excess of 180 days who are counted against the number of general and flag officers on active duty and are included in the distribution of officers within the general and flag officer grades.

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize the chiefs of the reserve components and the directors of the Army and Air National Guard to serve at one grade higher than currently authorized if certain conditions were met. Officers serving as the chief of a reserve components or director of the Army or Air National Guard would be authorized, subject to the advice and consent of the Senate, to serve one grade higher than currently authorized if they were recommended by the secretary of the military department and were adjudged by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, as a result of a criteria and process established by the Chairman, to possess significant joint duty experience. Officers in these positions serving at a higher grade would count against the number of general and flag officers on active duty and against the limit on three- and four-staff general and flag officers. The amendment would, for a three-year transition period, permit the Secretary of Defense to waive the joint duty experience criteria established by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff

While the ultimate decision regarding qualifying criteria should be left with the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, the conferees believe that officers serving at a higher grade should not be limited exclusively to those who have served a joint general and flag officer tour. The conferees believe that reserve officers could gain joint experience in a variety of different ways, for example, as a result of repetitive tours of less than 180 days, as an individual mobilization augmentee, as an advisor to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, or some other experience. The conferees urge the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to take account of this consideration when formulating the selection criteria.

At least one member of the funeral honors detail must represent the service of the deceased veteran. The Secretary of Defense would be able to use either active or reserve component or a mix of active and reserve component personnel to provide the funeral honors. The ceremony would, at a minimum, include folding and presentation of the United States flag and the playing of taps. The provision would authorize reserve component personnel who participate in an honor guard detail to receive retirement point credit, would authorize medical treatment for any illness or injury a reservist might incur during the period in which they are participating in an honor detail and would authorize a $50 stipend for the performance as part of a funeral honors detail. The provision would also make deceased members or former members of the Selected Reserve eligible for funeral honors. The Secretary would also be authorized to provide financial support, material, equipment, and training to support nongovernmental organizations, as necessary to support honor guard activities. The provision would also provide incentives to facilitate the participation of reservists by providing retirement credit, reimbursement for transportation costs, and a $50 stipend to reservists who volunteer to provide funeral honors.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Purpose and funding limitations for National Guard Challenge Program (sec. 579)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1051) that would repeal the provision of law that limits federal expenditures under the National Guard Challenge Program to $50.0 million in any fiscal year

The Senate recedes.

Department of Defense STARBASE Program (sec. 580)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1057) that would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct a science, mathematics, and technology education improvement program known as the DOD STARBASE Program. The provision would require the Secretary to establish a minimum of 25 academies under the program, with minimum annual funding of $200,000 per academy. The provision would authorize the Secretary to provide administrative and logistical support for activities under the program and to accept financial and other support from other federal agencies, state and local governments, and not-for-profit and other organizations in the private sector.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would eliminate the mandated funding levels and make other clarifying changes.

STARBASE targets at-risk youth and combats some of the most challenging problems facing America's youth today: negative feelings towards science and math; lack of personal direction; and substance abuse. It was initiated as a pilot program at Selfridge Air National Guard Base in Michigan in 1990. The Department of Defense has funded this program since 1993.

The conferees note that the Department of Defense and the military services have developed and are implementing effective policies to specify and govern the use of personnel, military facilities and other Department of Defense support to the STARBASE program. The conferees believe the provision of such support enhances the effectiveness of STARBASE. As a result of the availability of such resources, STARBASE is able to provide varied and exciting platforms for its curriculum. Students gain new perceptions of math and science, techniques for the development of positive self-esteem and answers to questions on how to avoid substance abuse. Such support also offers positive exposure to the military for STARBASE children, older siblings, parents and teachers. As a result, the conferees believe that such policies for providing personnel, military facilities, and other support to STARBASE should continue to be used. So long as this support continues, the conferees do not believe it is necessary to mandate, in statute, the authority for military departments to provide support to STARBASE.

The STARBASE program has been highly successful because of the insistence on maintaining a fully funded quality program. The conferees encourage the Secretary of Defense to establish criteria for each STARBASE program that will maintain that quality and to support the establishment and operation only of those STARBASE programs that are funded at a level sufficient to ensure program success.

Survey of members leaving military service on attitudes toward military service (sec. 581)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 583) that would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct a one-time survey of military personnel leaving the services between January 1, 2000 and June 30, 2000, to determine military members' attitudes on a variety of subjects that may be affecting retention.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would limit financial assistance provided to eligible civilian providers to appropriated funds, would ensure that use of civilian providers does not supplant or replace child care and youth program services of a military installation, and would clarify the requirements for determining the eligibility of civilian providers.

Report and regulations on Department of Defense policies on protecting the confidentiality of communications with professionals providing therapeutic or related services regarding sexual or domestic abuse (sec. 585)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1026) that would require the Comptroller General to study the policies, procedures, and practices of the military departments for protecting the confidentiality of communications between military dependents, who have engaged in or who are victims of sexual harassment, sexual abuse, or intra-family abuse, and the professionals with whom the dependent seeks professional services concerning these matters. The provision would also require the Secretary of Defense to prescribe regulations, policies, and procedures the Secretary considers necessary to protect these communications, consistent with the findings of the Comptroller General; relevant professional organization standards; federal and state law; the best interest of the victims of sexual harassment, sexual assault, or intra-family abuse; military necessity; and other factors, that the Secretary, in consultation with the Attorney General, consider appropriate. The Comptroller General would be required to submit a report on his findings to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives, as well as the Secretary of Defense. The Secretary of Defense would be required to report, not later than January 21, 2000, to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives with regard to the policies recommended.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 570) that would require the Comptroller General to conduct a study of the policies regarding confidentiality between military dependents and their psychotherapists. The Secretary of Defense would be required to prescribe regulations to protect confidentiality 90 days after receiving the Comptroller General's report.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Members under burdensome personnel tempo (sec. 586)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 692) that would establish procedures to manage the deployment of service members. Specifically, the provision would require that the first general or flag officer in the chain of command approve the deployment of a member who would be deployed more than 180 days of the past 365 days. The provision would also require that deployments of members who would be deployed more than 200 days of the past 365 days be approved by a four-star general or flag officer. The provision would require that service members deployed in excess of 220 days of the past 365 days be paid $100 per day for each day over 220 days. The provision would authorize the Secretary of Defense to suspend applicability of this provision when the Secretary determines that such a waiver is in the national security interests of the United States.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would change the points at which senior officer approval is required. The amendment would require the first general or flag officer in the chain of command to approve any deployment in excess of 182 days. Approval of a general or flag officer in the grade of general or admiral would be required for any deployment that would be in excess of 220 days. Service members deployed in excess of 250 days would be paid $100 per day for each day over 250 days. The amendment would define the term deployment until 90 days after the Secretary of Defense develops a common method to measure operations tempo and personnel tempo as required by another provision in this conference report and reports the definition to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives. At that time, the definition of perstempo will obtain. The amendment would authorize the service chief to suspend applicability of the provision when the service chief determines that it is in the national security interests of the United States. The senior officer approval requirements would be effective October 1, 2000. The amendment would make the payment of the $100 per diem effective October 1, 2001.

The conferees are determined to ensure that the services have the means to track the perstempo of individual service members and consider the effects of perstempo when assigning service members to deployments and other temporary duties away from the service member's home station. The conferees understand that each service is unique and manages deployment of units differently. While the point at which general and flag officer approval is required and at which the additional per diem would be paid is universal, the conferees will entertain a recommendation by the Secretary of Defense to adjust these points to accommodate deployment cycles or other operational considerations.

The conferees consider it vital that the services expeditiously develop the new record keeping systems that will allow detailed analysis of operations and personnel tempo on an individual basis. The conferees consider this objective a high priority matter that will receive continuing close oversight.

Subtitle K—Domestic Violence

Responses to domestic violence in the armed forces (sec. 591–594)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 581) that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish a military-civilian task force on domestic violence. The task force would serve for three years. Within six months of appointment, the task force would recommend actions to the Department of Defense: a standard format for agreements with civilian law enforcement authorities relating to acts of domestic violence involving members of the armed forces; a requirement that commanding officers provide to persons protected by a "no contact order" a written copy of that order within 24 hours; standard guidance to commanders on factors to consider when determining appropriate action on substantiated allegations of domestic violence; and a standard training program for all commanding officers on the handling of domestic violence cases. The task force would submit additional periodic reports to the Secretary of Defense containing analyses and recommendations for responding, or improving responses, to cases of domestic violence. The provision would also require the Secretary to establish a central database and report annually to Congress on each reported case of domestic violence, the number and action taken on substantiated allegations, and the number and description of allegations where the evidence is insufficient to support disciplinary action.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would clarify the membership on the task force, would establish an incentive program for improving responses to domestic violence involving members of the armed forces and military family members, modify the termination date to be three years after enactment of this Act and make other clarifying changes separating the provision into four separate provisions.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees did not include this provision in the conference report solely because it was determined to be unnecessary. The conferees intend that the Air Force take those personnel actions, within current law and policy, necessary to ensure that the Community College of the Air Force remains an accredited degree granting institution. The conferees note that the Office of Personnel Management, in a letter dated July 13, 1998, has stated that the Air Force has the authority under title 10, United States Code, to impose minimum educational requirements in order to acquire and retain accreditation of the Community College of the Air Force. The Office of Personnel Management letter indicates that the authority to implement a minimum education requirement policy for instructors in the Community College of the Air Force can be implemented immediately and, further, that the Office of Personnel Management will include this authority in the next revision to the Qualifications Standards Operating Manual. The conferees expect the Air Force to establish the appropriate minimum education requirements for instructors in the Community College of the Air Force.

Posthumous advancement of Rear Admiral (Retired) Husband E. Kimmel and Major General (Retired) Walter C. Short on retired lists

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 582) that would request the President to advance the late Rear Admiral (retired) Husband E. Kimmel to the grade of admiral on the retired list of the Navy and to advance the late Major General (retired) Walter C. Short to the grade of lieutenant general on the retired list of the Army. Any advancement shall not increase or otherwise modify the compensation or benefits to any person, now or in the future, based on the military service of the officer advanced. The provision would express the Sense of the Congress that Rear Admiral Kimmel and Major General Short performed their duties in Hawaii competently and professionally and, therefore, the losses incurred by the United States in the attack on Pearl Harbor, Hickham Army Air Field and Schofield Barracks, Hawaii on December 7, 1941 were not a result of dereliction of duty.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees note that a recent General Accounting Office study (GAO/ RCED-99-179) could not conclude that merely lowering the statutory blood alcohol level resulted in lowering the number and severity of alcohol-related traffic accidents. However, the report did find strong indications that a comprehensive approach, including license revocation and lowered blood alcohol statutes, public education campaigns, and increased enforcement would have that effect. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives before April 1, 2000, on the Department's efforts to reduce alcohol-related disciplinary infractions, traffic accidents, and other such incidents. The report should include the Secretary's recommendations for any appropriate legislative changes.

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 652) that would, effective July 1, 2000, authorize members of the uniformed services to participate in the Thrift Savings Plan now available for federal civil service employees. Service members would be eligible to deposit up to five percent of their basic pay, before tax, each month. The government is not required to match the service member's contributions. In addition, service members would be permitted to directly deposit special pays for enlistment, reenlistment, and the lump-sum for electing to remain in the "Redux" retirement program, pre-tax, up to the extent allowable under the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, into their Thrift Savings account. The Secretary of Defense may delay the effective date for members of the Ready Reserve for 180 days if the Secretary, in consultation with the Director of the Federal Thrift Retirement Investment Board, finds that immediate implementation would place an excessive administrative burden on the Thrift Board's ability to accommodate participants.

The House amendment contained several provisions (secs. 661–664) that would authorize members of the uniformed services performing active service to participate in the Thrift Savings Plan now available for federal civil service employees. Service members would be eligible to deposit up to five percent of their basic pay, before tax, each month. The government is not required to match the service member's contributions.

The amendment would also make the effective date of the authorities for members of the uniformed services performing active service contingent on the President, in the fiscal year 2001 budget, proposing legislation offsetting the lost revenues, and subsequent enactment of those offsets.

The House recedes with an amendment that would make the effective date of the authorities for members of the uniformed services, both active and reserve, contingent on the President proposing offsets for the lost revenues, in the fiscal year 2001 budget request, and subsequent congressional approval of those offsets and would make other technical changes.

The conferees note that, under certain circumstances, members of the uniformed services receive pay and allowances that are not subject to federal tax. Since these earnings are tax-free, any future payments from a service member's thrift savings account, based on contributions from tax-free earnings, should be tax-free as well. The conferees direct the thrift board to implement procedures to ensure that contributions from tax-free earnings remains nontaxable upon distribution to the member.

The conferees determined that the secretaries of the military departments currently have the authority under the Joint Travel Regulations to reimburse a member of the armed forces for travel expenses incurred as a result of being recalled from leave to meet a mission requirement. The conferees expect that the secretaries of the military departments will reimburse those service members who were recalled to meet a requirement related to Operation Allied Force. Additionally, the conferees expect the secretaries of the military departments to ensure, through the command information program, that commanders and service members are aware of the authorities in the Joint Travel Regulation with regard to claims for reimbursement for travel expenses incurred as a result of being recalled from leave to meet an operational requirement.

Report on effect of educational benefits improvements on recruitment and retention of members of the armed forces

TITLE VII—HEALTH CARE PROVISIONS

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Processing of TRICARE contract adjustments

The conferees are concerned about reports that the Department of Defense has not acted on a large number of requests for contract adjustment submitted by TRICARE managed care support contractors. The adjustment requests include contract modifications, bid price adjustments, and requests for equitable adjustment.

The conferees recognize that modifications to original TRICARE managed care support contracts are often required to ensure that beneficiaries receive the best care possible and that the program is effective and efficient. Contractors anticipate some changes and make allowances in the original bids. However, the Department has issued and continues to issue more contract modifications than most contractors anticipate. In addition, assumptions on levels of resource sharing made during the contract proposal process have, in many cases, not been met. Contractors should not be held accountable for unanticipated modifications or unrealized government estimates that are beyond the contractor's control. Failure to act in a timely manner on requests for contract adjustment is a bad business practice and places both the contractors and the government in a fiscally precarious position.

The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives by March 1, 2000, on the status of pending requests for contract adjustments and the Department's plan for eliminating any backlog. At a minimum, this report shall include, for each unresolved request for adjustment, a breakout of the amount of the contractor's request, the government estimate of the amount that should be allowed, the date of the request, and the projected date the request will be completed.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Health Care Services

Pharmacy benefits program (sec. 701)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 721) that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish an effective, efficient, and integrated pharmacy benefit. The Secretary of Defense would submit a design for the pharmacy benefit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than April 15, 2000. The re-engineered pharmacy benefit would include, as a minimum, a uniform formulary and shall assure the availability of pharmaceutical agents to beneficiaries, including drugs not included in the uniform formulary, if clinically appropriate. The Secretary of Defense would form a pharmaceutical and therapeutics committee, with members appointed from the military services and contractors for TRICARE managed support, TRICARE retail pharmacy program, and the national mail order pharmacy, to develop the uniform formulary. The Secretary of Defense would also establish a Uniform Formulary Beneficiary Advisory Panel, with membership to be determined by the Secretary of Defense, to review and comment on the development of the uniform formulary. The Pharmacy Data Transaction Service would be implemented not later than April 1, 2000.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Provision of chiropractic health care (sec. 702)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 712) that would extend, by one year, the period in which the Secretary of Defense must carry out a chiropractic health care demonstration program. The one-year extension would permit the demonstration program to continue while the evaluation of the demonstration program is conducted.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 702) that would direct the Department of Defense to terminate the demonstration phase of the program, complete data collection and analysis, submit the report to the Congress as required by the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1998 (Public Law 105–85), and would change the reporting date from May 1, 2000 to January 31, 2000. Additionally, this provision would direct the Department of Defense to maintain, as a minimum, the current level and scope of chiropractic care services at the present locations until at least September 30, 2000.

The Senate recedes.

Provision of domiciliary and custodial care for certain CHAMPUS beneficiaries (sec. 703)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 716) that would ensure continued coverage for certain beneficiaries who have been receiving custodial care normally disallowed under current law and regulations that exclude CHAMPUS/TRICARE coverage for custodial care.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 703) that would provide for the equitable treatment and protection of approximately 25 beneficiaries who have been receiving custodial care services through demonstration programs, which are due to expire, and who will not be eligible for that care under the Department of Defense case management program.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to continue to provide payment under the CHAMPUS for domiciliary or custodial care services to an eligible beneficiary that would otherwise be excluded from such coverage and would prohibit the Secretary from placing a time limit on the period during which the custodial care exclusions of the Department of Defense may be waived as part of the case management program. The amendment would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct a survey of federally funded and state funded programs for the medical care and management of persons whose care is considered custodial in nature and to report the results and any recommendations to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than March 31, 2000.

Enhancement of dental benefits for retirees (sec. 704)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 717) that would change the benefit available under the retiree dental program to make the benefit comparable to the benefit offered under the family member dental plan.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Medical and dental care for certain members incurring injuries on inactive-duty training (sec. 705)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 718) that would authorize a secretary of a military department to order a member of a reserve component to active duty for more than 30 days while the member is being treated for, or recovering from, an injury, illness, or disease incurred in the line of duty. The provision would authorize medical and dental care for the family members of a reservist ordered to active duty under this authority.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Health care at former uniformed services treatment facilities for active duty members stationed at certain remote locations (sec. 706)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 711) that would authorize active duty personnel who live within the service areas of TRICARE Designated Providers (formerly Uniformed Services Treatment Facilities) to receive health care from a TRICARE Designated Provider if the active duty member is more than 50 miles from the nearest medical treatment facility.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 701) that would expand the provisions of the Department of Defense TRICARE Remote program by allowing active duty service members assigned to duties in areas remote from military treatment facilities to receive care from designated providers.

The House recedes.

Open enrollment demonstration program (sec. 707)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 705) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to conduct a demonstration program under which covered beneficiaries would be permitted to enroll at any time in a managed care plan offered by a Uniform Services Family Health Plan facility. The demonstration program would begin October 1, 1999, and end September 30, 2001, with a report evaluating the demonstration program submitted to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than March 15, 2001. The number and location of the demonstration sites would be determined by the Secretary of Defense.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

The conferees note that, in an attempt to reduce allegations of political influence in site selection for previous demonstration programs, the Department of Defense has developed a random selection process for determining which sites, among those eligible for a demonstration, would be selected. Given the intense interest in this demonstration, should the Secretary of Defense choose to conduct the demonstration in fewer than the seven Uniform Services Family Health Plan facilities, the random selection process may be the preferred method of selecting the demonstration sites.

Subtitle B—TRICARE Program

Expansion and revision of authority for dental programs for dependents and reserves (sec. 711)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 702) that would expand eligibility for voluntary enrollment dental plans to include members of the Ready Reserve described in section 10144(b) of title 10, United States Code, subject to involuntary order to active duty, and dependents of members of the Ready Reserve not on active duty for more than 30 days and would require the member to pay a share of the premium charged for the plan. Plans for other members of the Individual Ready Reserve and for eligible dependents of members of the Ready Reserve, not on active duty for more than 30 days, would require the member to pay the entire premium charged for the plan.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Improvement of access to health care under the TRICARE program (sec. 712)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 716) that would prohibit the Secretary of Defense from requiring, except under certain conditions, a beneficiary to obtain a nonavailability statement or preauthorization, except for mental health services, in order to receive health care from a civilian provider or in specialized treatment facilities outside a 200 mile radius of a military medical treatment facility.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 718) that would require the Secretary of Defense to, in all new managed care support contracts, eliminate requirements, in certain cases under TRICARE Prime, that network primary care managers preauthorize preventative health care services within the managed care support contract network.

The Senate bill contained a similar provision (section 701).

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of Defense, to the maximum extent practicable, to minimize the authorization and certification requirements imposed on TRICARE beneficiaries and to require a single nonavailability of health care statement to cover all health care services related to outpatient prenatal, outpatient or inpatient delivery and outpatient postpartum care subsequent to the visit that confirms the pregnancy.

Improvements to claims processing under the TRICARE program (sec. 713)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 711) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to implement the changes to the TRICARE claims processing system recommended by the General Accounting Office to bring TRICARE claims processing more in line with commercial best business practices and the procedures used by Medicare, and would require additional contract start-up time for new TRICARE managed care support contracts to ensure a smoother transition to the new contract.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 713) that would require the Secretary of Defense to structure future TRICARE managed care support contracts to provide financial incentives to health care providers who file claims for payment electronically.

The Senate bill contained a similar provision (sec. 701).

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would define a clean claim and require the Secretary of Defense to implement a system for processing TRICARE claims under which 95 percent of all clean claims be processed within 30 days of receipt and 100 percent of all clean claims be processed within 100 days of receipt. The amendment would extend the transition time for new TRICARE managed care support contracts from six months to nine months and, in future TRICARE managed care support contracts, provide financial incentives to health care providers who file claims for payment electronically.

Authority to waive certain TRICARE deductibles (sec. 714)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 712) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to waive the TRICARE deductible requirement for the families of guardsmen and reservists recalled to active duty for less than one year.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TRICARE beneficiary counseling and assistance coordinators (sec. 715)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 704) that would require each TRICARE lead agent to establish a beneficiary advocate for TRICARE beneficiaries, and would require the commander of each military treatment facility to designate a person, as a primary or collateral duty, to serve as beneficiary advocate for beneficiaries served at that facility.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would change the designation of beneficiary advocate to beneficiary counseling and assistance coordinator.

The conferees expect the lead agents and the military treatment facility commanders to market aggressively the existence of the beneficiary counseling and assistance coordinators and the services that office will provide. The conferees further expect that each military treatment facility, TRICARE Prime location, and TRICARE Service Center will have signs identifying the lead agent beneficiary counseling and assistance coordinator, the local beneficiary counseling and assistance coordinator, and the toll free telephone numbers prominently displayed.

Improvement of TRICARE management; improvements to third-party payer collection program (sec. 716)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 722) that would make two changes to the third party collection program under section 1095 of title 10, United States Code, which allows military treatment facilities to collect from health insurance carriers and other third party payers. The provision would allow Department of Defense facilities to bill third party payers on reasonable charges based on current payment rates under the CHAMPUS and would expand the definition of "third party payer" to match the definition of "other insurance" in the CHAMPUS double coverage program.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 714) that would require the Secretary of Defense to study how the maximum allowable rates charged for the 100 most commonly performed medical procedures under CHAMPUS compare with the usual and customary commercial insurance rates for such procedures in each TRICARE Prime catchment area and to submit a proposal to increase the maximum allowable charges should the study indicate that the CHAMPUS rates were too low.

The Senate bill contained a similar provision (section 701).

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would permit the Secretary of Defense to reimburse TRICARE health care providers at rates higher than the maximum rates if the Secretary determines that application of the higher rates is necessary in order to ensure the availability of an adequate number of health care providers in TRICARE, to clarify that military medical treatment facilities may collect from a third-party payer reasonable charges for health care services incurred on behalf of a covered beneficiary, and to submit a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives that would assess the effects of the implementation of these requirements not later than six months after the date of enactment of this Act.

Comparative report on health care coverage under the TRICARE program (sec. 717)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 701) that would require a number of improvements to TRICARE benefits and management. The recommended provision would require the Secretary of Defense, to the maximum extent practicable, to ensure that health care coverage under TRICARE is substantially similar to the health care coverage available under similar health plans offered under the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program. The recommended provision would also require TRICARE benefits to be portable throughout the various regions, require that the authorization and certification requirements as a condition of access to TRICARE be minimized, and that TRICARE claims processing follow the best business practices of the health care provider industry. In addition, the recommended provision would permit the Secretary of Defense to reimburse health care providers at rates higher than the current Medicare limits when the Secretary determines that higher reimbursement rates are necessary to ensure adequate network coverage. The new authority would permit military treatment facilities to collect reasonable charges, from a third-party insurer, that are incurred on behalf of a covered beneficiary.

The House amendment contained a number of provisions (sections 711–718) that would require similar improvements to the TRICARE system.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of Defense to compare health care available through the TRICARE program with coverage available under similar health care plans offered under the Federal Employees Health Benefits program and submit a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives not later March 31, 2000.

The remaining elements of the Senate provision are addressed in other legislative provisions in this conference report.

Subtitle C—Other Matters

Forensic pathology investigations by Armed Forces Medical Examiner (sec. 721)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 576) that would permit the Armed Forces Medical Examiner or the installation commander concerned to direct that a forensic pathology investigation, including an autopsy, be conducted to determine the cause or manner of death of a deceased person under certain conditions and would permit a forensic pathology investigation be conducted in cases where it appears that: (1) the decedent was killed or that the cause of death was unnatural; (2) the cause of death is unknown; (3) there is reasonable suspicion that the death was by unlawful means; (4) it appears that the death may have resulted from an infectious disease or from the effects of a hazardous material that may have an adverse effect on the military installation or the community; (5) or the identity of the decedent is unknown. These conditions would only apply to decedents found dead or had died at an installation that is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States; the decedent was a member of the armed forces on active duty or inactive duty for training, or a former member recently retired as a result of an injury or illness incurred while on active duty or inactive duty for training; and the decedent was a civilian dependent of a member of the armed forces and was found dead or died outside the United States. In addition, the provision would repeal applicable provisions in title 10, United States Code, and require Army and Air Force installation commanders to direct a summary court-martial to investigate the circumstances of the death. The committee understands that installation commanders have independent authority to investigate the circumstances of deaths that occur on an installation that is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 723).

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Best value contracting (sec. 722)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 714) that would require the Secretary of Defense to ensure that health care contracts in excess of $5.0 million provide the best value to the United States. The recommended provision would require that greater weight be afforded to technical and performance-related factors than cost and price-related factors.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Health care quality information and technology enhancement (sec. 723)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 719) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to establish a Department of Defense Center for Medical Infomatics to carry out a program to support the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs in assessing health care information, developing a digital patient record, developing a capability for evaluating the quality of care provided by the military medical system and to conduct research on matters of ensuring quality health care delivery. The Secretary of Defense would be required to establish a Medical Infomatics Council to coordinate the development, deployment and maintenance of health care infomatics systems. The provision would require an annual report on the quality of health care provided under the military health care system. The provision would authorize an increase of $2.0 million to the Defense Health Program to fund the required infomatics system.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish a Department of Defense program for medical infomatics and data to accelerate efforts to automate, capture and exchange controlled clinical data and present providers with clinical guidance using a personal identification carrier, clinical lexicon or digital patient record. The Secretary of Defense would be required to establish a Medical Infomatics Advisory Committee to advise the Secretary of Defense with regard to the development, deployment and maintenance of health care infomatics systems for the Department of Defense in coordination with other federal departments and the private sector. The provision would require an annual report on the quality of health care provided under the military health care system.

Joint telemedicine and telepharmacy demonstration projects by the Department of Defense and Department of Veterans Affairs (sec. 724)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 720) that would direct the Secretary of Defense, in conjunction with the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, to conduct joint demonstration projects for purposes of evaluating the feasibility and practicability of providing health care and pharmacy services by telecommunications.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would permit the Secretary of Defense, in conjunction with the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, to conduct joint demonstration projects for purposes of evaluating the feasibility and practicability of providing health care and pharmacy services by telecommunications.

Program-year stability in health care benefits (sec. 725)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 713) that would reduce the frequency of modifications to military health care system benefits and administrative practices by requiring that changes become effective on the first day of each fiscal year unless the Secretary of Defense determines that a different effective date would improve care to eligible beneficiaries.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 711) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to implement changes to the TRICARE claims processing system recommended by the General Accounting Office. The changes directed by this section would also bring TRICARE claims processing more in line with commercial best business practices and the procedures used by Medicare. Additionally, when contracts are re-awarded to other than the existing managed care support contractor, this provision would require additional contract start-up time to ensure a smoother phase in of the new contract.

The House recedes with an amendment that would promote increased stability in TRICARE managed support contracts by requiring that changes to the contracts be made no more frequently than once per quarter unless the Secretary of Defense determines that a different effective date would improve care to eligible beneficiaries.

The conferees urge the Secretary of Defense to consider implementing a policy that would limit changes to the TRICARE benefit to become effective on the first day of each fiscal year. The conferees believe that changing the benefit annually would permit the lead agents and managed support contractors to inform beneficiaries of benefit changes in advance of the effective date and would permit the health benefits advisors and health care providers to be informed and prepare for such changes before the changes became effective and note that administrative and other operational modifications would still be made quarterly.

Study on joint operations for the Defense Health Program (sec. 726)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 725) that would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct a study of areas where the Defense Health Program could improve joint operations.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Trauma training center (sec. 727)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 724) that would recommend an increase of $4.0 million in the Defense Health Program to support the Army Medical Department in establishing a Trauma Training Center up to Level 1.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would eliminate the recommendation for a specific increase in funding.

Sense of Congress regarding automatic enrollment of Medicare-eligible beneficiaries in the TRICARE Senior Prime demonstration program (sec. 728)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 703) that would express the sense of Congress that a uniformed services beneficiary who is enrolled in a managed health care program of the Department of Defense where the TRICARE Senior Prime demonstration is conducted and who attains eligibility for Medicare should be authorized automatic enrollment in the TRICARE Senior Prime demonstration program.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Reimbursement of certain costs incurred by covered beneficiaries when referred for care outside local catchment area

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 717) that would require, in future TRICARE managed care support contracts, that TRICARE beneficiaries receive reimbursement for personal automobile mileage or air travel incurred with regard to a referral by a network provider or military treatment facility to a provider more than 100 miles outside a catchment area.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Removal of restriction on use of funds for abortions in cases of rape or incest

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 704) that would include among the abortions funded by the Department of Defense those in which the pregnancy is the result of an act of forcible rape or incest which has been reported to a law enforcement agency.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Requirements for provision of care in geographically separated units

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 715) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to include, in future TRICARE managed care support contracts, the requirement that the TRICARE Prime remote network provide health care concurrently to service members and their dependents in geographically separated units outside the catchment area of a military treatment facility.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees note that the Secretary of Defense has committed to implementing TRICARE Prime Remote to provide health care for service members and dependents assigned to geographically separated units. The conferees are concerned that the Secretary of Defense has not implemented a TRICARE Remote program for active duty military personnel and their families. The National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1998 directed that active duty personnel assigned to geographically separated units be provided health care locally. Subsequently, the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs began to develop a TRICARE Remote Program that would also provide health care to the families of active duty personnel in remote locations. The conferees expect the Secretary of Defense to implement a TRICARE Remote program for active duty personnel and their families, not later than January 21, 2000. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives when TRICARE Remote has been implemented.

TITLE VIII—ACQUISITION POLICY, ACQUISITION MANAGEMENT, AND RELATED MATTERS

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Modernization of contract administrative services information systems

The conferees believe that an essential element of a successful acquisition system is the ability to pay contractors amounts due in a timely fashion. Modern information systems are critical in helping the Department of Defense match requests for payments to work performed and provide payment for valid invoices. The conferees have been informed that the completion of the modernization of the Contract Administrative Services (MOCAS) system has been delayed, with completion now estimated for fiscal year 2004. This delay will mean that payment problems caused by the current systems—including overpayments, mismatched disbursements, and unreasonable delays in payments to vendors—are likely to continue for several more years. The conferees encourage the Department to take appropriate action to ensure completion of the required modernization as soon as possible.

Technical staff and service contracting

The conferees have been informed that the Department of Defense (DOD) continues to employ contract provisions requiring that technical staff members performing on service contracts have a minimum of three years experience. This practice appears to be inconsistent with the concept of performance-based contracting, which emphasizes holding contractors responsible for results, rather than micromanaging how the work will be performed. It may also be inconsistent with industry practice in the rapidly changing information technology field, where bachelor level graduates with no work experience often have problem-solving skills and knowledge of the latest technologies that individuals with more experience may lack. The conferees believe that DOD should review the utility and application of these contract provisions and make appropriate changes. Where appropriate alternatives, such as performance-based contracting, are available to protect the interests of the Department and the taxpayer, the conferees urge the Department to consider discontinuing the use of such clauses.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Amendments to General Contracting Authorities, Procedures, and Limitations

Authority to carry out certain prototype projects (sec. 801)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 804) that would require the Department of Defense to ensure that the General Accounting Office has audit access to other transaction prototype authority agreements that provide for payments in excess of $5.0 million, unless a public interest waiver is obtained.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would exempt from General Accounting Office audit access a party or entity, or a subordinate element of a party or entity, that has not entered into any other agreement that provides for audit access in the year prior to the agreement.

Streamlined applicability of cost accounting standards (sec. 802)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 806) that would modify and streamline the applicability of the Federal cost accounting standards (CAS).

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would raise the threshold for coverage under the CAS standards from $25.0 million to $50.0 million; exempt contractors from coverage if they do not have a contract in excess of $7.5 million; and exclude coverage based on firm, fixed price contracts awarded on the basis of adequate price competition without the submission of certified cost or pricing data.

The provision also would authorize federal agencies, as part of their traditional role in administering contracts, to waive the applicability of the CAS standards to contracts of less than $15.0 million with companies that primarily sell commercial items. Agencies also would be authorized to waive the CAS standards for contracts of $15.0 million or more in "exceptional circumstances." The "exceptional circumstances" waiver may be used only when a waiver is necessary to meet the needs of an agency, i.e. when the agency determines that it would not be able to obtain needed products or services from the vendor in the absence of a waiver. The provision also would exempt from the CAS standards for a one year period contracts under the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program established under chapter 89 of title 5, United States Code.

Subsection (f) of this provision would require the Administrator for Federal Procurement Policy to report to Congress on the three categories of CAS coverage known as "full," "modified," and "Federal Acquisition Regulation" (FAR) coverage and to include recommendations on whether "modified" and "FAR" coverage should be consolidated, combined, or revised. The conferees direct the Administrator to consult with the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology, the Director of the Defense Contract Audit Agency, the Department of Defense Inspector General, and other appropriate federal officials in preparing this report.

Sale, exchange, and waiver authority for coal and coke (sec. 803)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 801) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to sell, exchange, or waive provisions of law in the purchase of coal and coke when it would be in the public interest to do so.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Guidance on use of task order and delivery order contracts (sec. 804)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 807) that would require the Federal Acquisition Regulation to provide guidance on the appropriate use of task and delivery order contracts, as authorized by the Federal Acquisition Streamlining Act of 1994.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Comptroller General of the United States to report on the conformance of the regulations issued under this provision with existing law.

Clarification of definition of commercial items with respect to associated services (sec. 805)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 808) that would clarify that services ancillary to a commercial item, such as installation, maintenance, repair, training, and other support services, would be considered a commercial service, regardless of whether the service is provided by the same vendor or at the same time as the item, if the service is provided contemporaneously to the general public under similar terms and conditions.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Use of special simplified procedures for purchases of items in excess of the simplified acquisition threshold (sec. 806)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 809) that would extend by three years the expiring pilot authority to allow the application of simplified acquisition procedures to commercial items below a $5.0 million threshold.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 802).

The House recedes.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would extend the program by three years and require the Secretary of Defense to report to Congress on the advisability and feasibility of establishing a plan for transitioning the mentor-protege program to one that operates without a dedicated appropriation. The amendment would also require the Comptroller General of the United States to conduct a review on the efficacy of the mentor-protege program and provide a report on the results of that review to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives by January 1, 2002.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would direct the Secretary of Defense to examine the profit guidelines to consider appropriate changes that would encourage innovation and technical risk and to make any changes deemed appropriate following the review. The conferees further require the Secretary to report to the congressional defense committees on the results of the review no later than 180 days after the enactment of the Act.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require that if the Secretary of the Army determines, on the basis of the study conducted pursuant to section 809(e) of the Strom Thurmond National Defense Act for Fiscal Year 1999, that it is necessary to protect the small arms production industrial base, the Secretary shall extend the requirements of section 2373, title 10, United States Code, to the M-2 and M-60 machine guns. The amendment would also clarify covered property and services under section 2473(b) to apply to critical repair parts consisting of barrels, bolts and receivers. The conferees direct the Secretary to implement section 2473 in a manner that enhances the quality and reliability of small arms used by the Department of Defense and minimizes the adverse effects on small business and competition.

Compliance with existing law regarding purchases of equipment and products (sec. 816)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 809) to limit funds to be expended by an entity of the Department of Defense (DOD) unless the entity agrees to comply with the Buy America Act, express the sense of Congress stating that DOD should only purchase American-made equipment and products, and require the Secretary of Defense to determine whether a person should be debarred from federal contracting if that person has been convicted of fraudulent use of "Made in America" labels.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Facilitation of national missile defense system

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 806) that would: (1) allow the Secretary of Defense to make a determination to proceed with production of a national missile defense (NMD) system prior to completion of initial operational test and evaluation (IOT&E); (2) require that the Secretary ensure that an adequate operational test and evaluation for an NMD system be completed as soon as practicable following such a determination; and (3) require the Secretary to notify the Armed Services Committee of the House of Representatives and the Armed Services Committee of the Senate when such a determination is made.

The Senate bill contained no similar amendment.

The House recedes.

The conferees are aware that the NMD program may not be able to proceed into initial operational test and evaluation with production representative interceptor missiles unless the program is restructured or is granted a waiver from current law. Conferees note that section 2399(a) of title 10, United States Code, requires that initial operational testing and evaluation of a major defense acquisition program be completed prior to entry into production. However, the NMD program is currently scheduled to begin IOT&E with missiles from the first production lot.

The conferees direct that, not later than March 1, 2000, the Director of the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization shall submit a report to the congressional defense committees that: (1) identifies and describes any impediments posed by current acquisition laws and regulations to meeting the current NMD system baseline schedule; and (2) provides recommendations for necessary statutory or regulatory relief.

TITLE IX—DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE ORGANIZATION AND MANAGEMENT

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Department of Defense Strategic Planning

Permanent requirement for Quadrennial Defense Review (sec. 901)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 906) that would make permanent the requirement contained in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997, for the Secretary of Defense to conduct a Quadrennial Defense Review (QDR) at the beginning of each new administration with a view toward determining and expressing the defense strategy of the United States and establishing a revised defense plan for the ensuing 10 to 20 years. The Secretary would provide the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives with a report on the results of the QDR that would include, among other things, a comprehensive discussion of the defense strategy of the United States and various force structures suited to implement that strategy, the threats to U.S. national interests examined for the purposes of the review, the assumptions used in the review, the effect on the force structure of preparations for and participation in peace operations, the effect on the force structure of anticipated technological advancements, the manpower and sustainment policies required under the defense strategy, the anticipated roles and missions of the reserve components, the appropriate ratio of combat forces to support forces, the required air and sea-lift capabilities, the forward presence and prepositioning requirements under the strategy, the extent to which resources must be shifted from one theater to another under the defense strategy, and recommended changes to the Unified Command Plan. The report would be submitted not later than September 30 of the year in which the review is conducted.

The provision would also require the establishment of a National Defense Panel (NDP) that would conduct an assessment of the defense strategy, force structure, force modernization plans, infrastructure, budget plan, and other elements of the defense program and policies established under the previous quadrennial defense review. The assessment would be made with a view toward recommending the most critical changes that should be made to the defense strategy of the United States for the ensuing 10 and 20 years, and any changes considered appropriate by the Panel regarding major weapon systems programmed for the force. The panel would be established in the year immediately preceding a year in which a President is inaugurated and would consist of nine individuals from the private sector who are recognized experts in matters relating to national security.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require a QDR, but would not authorize a NDP. The amendment would also require an assessment of the risk, defining the nature and magnitude of the political, strategic, and military risks associated with executing the missions called for under the national military strategy. The amendment would also require a discussion of the force structure necessary to perform the national military strategy, and if that force structure could not perform the missions required by the national military strategy at a low-to-moderate risk, the additional resources that would be required to achieve a low-to-moderate risk.

The House amendment would also include a requirement to identify additional assumptions used during the performance of the QDR, including the benefits to, and burdens on, the United States forces resulting from coalition warfare; the intensity, duration, and military and political end-states of conflicts and smaller scale contingencies.

The conferees are mindful that the many previous attempts to define a national defense strategy and identify sufficient military forces to protect the United States and its national security interests during the post-Cold War era have suffered from a variety of shortcomings. The conferees intend that the Quadrennial Defense Review described in this provision should include an effort to determine a defense strategy designed to protect the full range of U.S. national security interests and to identify forces sufficient to do so at as low a risk as possible. A successful review, the conferees believe, should be driven first by the demands of strategy, not by any presupposition about the size of the defense budget.

Minimum interval for updating and revising Department of Defense strategic plan (sec. 902)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 905) that would amend the Government Performance and Results Act to increase the maximum length of time between updates and revisions of the strategic plan of the Department of Defense to four years. This provision would conform the strategic plan requirement for the Department of Defense to the schedule of the Quadrennial Defense Review (QDR), which serves as the strategic plan for the Department of Defense.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees accept the use of the QDR and the resulting report as the Government Performance and Results Act strategic plan for the Department of Defense. However, the conferees direct that a report resulting from the QDR contain a separate section dedicated to the Government Performance and Results Act strategic plan, and that it contain all of the strategic plan elements required by section 306(a) of title 5, United States Code.

SUBTITLE B—DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE ORGANIZATION

Responsibility for logistics and sustainment functions of the Department of Defense (sec. 911)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 902) that would establish and clarify responsibility for logistics and sustainment functions within the Office of the Secretary of Defense. First, the provision would rename the current position of Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology to Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology and Logistics, reflecting the increased importance of the logistics function. The provision would also create the new position of Deputy Under Secretary of Defense for Logistics and Materiel Readiness to provide this function the organizational stature and visibility that it deserves. The new position would be subject to confirmation by the United States Senate, a requirement intended to enhance the quality of the individuals nominated for this job and increase congressional oversight of this critical area.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Enhancement of technology security program of Department of Defense (sec. 912)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 910) that would establish the Technology Security Directorate (TSD) of the Defense Threat Reduction Agency (DTRA) as a separate Defense Department agency named the Defense Technology Security Agency, and would require the director of the agency to advise the Secretary of Defense on policy issues related to the transfer of strategically sensitive technology.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would retain the TSD within DTRA and require: (1) that the director of the TSD have the authority to advise the Secretary of Defense on policy issues related to the transfer of strategically sensitive technology; (2) the Secretary of Defense to ensure that the director of the TSD has appropriate resources and receives the necessary support to carry out the mission of the TSD; (3) that staff and resources of the TSD may not be used for purposes not related to the TSD missions of technology security and export control without the prior approval of the Under Secretary of Defense for Policy; and (4) the Secretary of Defense to provide to the congressional defense committees not later than March 1, 2000, a report on personnel and resource issues affecting the TSD.

Efficient utilization of defense laboratories (sec. 913)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 239) that would require the Secretary Department of Defense to carry out an independent, cross-service analysis of the resources and capabilities of the defense laboratories, and to identify opportunities to consolidate responsibilities by area or function or by designating lead agencies or executive agents. This section would also require the Department to develop a single performance review process, applicable to all of the military services, for rating the quality and relevance of the work performed by the defense laboratories.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Center for the Study of Chinese Military Affairs (sec. 914)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 905) that would establish a Center for the Study of Chinese Military Affairs at the National Defense University.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would establish a center within the Institute for National Strategic Studies of the National Defense University for the study of Chinese military affairs.

The conferees acknowledge that the strategic relationship between the United States and the People's Republic of China will be very important for future peace and security, not only in the Asia-Pacific region but around the world.

As the United States and the People's Republic of China work to forge a new strategic relationship, the conferees believe that the Department of Defense would benefit from a center focusing on research and assessment of political, strategic, and military affairs in the People's Republic of China. The center would be a valuable asset to the Department as it monitors the national security aspects of the developing relationship between the United States and the People's Republic of China.

The conferees agree that this center should conduct research relating to the potential of the People's Republic of China to act as a global great power, including research relating to economic trends, strengths and weaknesses in the science and technological sector, and relevant demographic and human resource factors. It should also conduct research on China's armed forces, including their character, role in Chinese society and economy, technological sophistication, and organizational and doctrinal concepts. Such research would include concepts concerning national interests, objectives and strategic culture; grand strategy, military strategy, military operations and tactics, and doctrinal concepts thereunder; the impact of doctrine on China's force structure; and the interaction of doctrine and force structure to create an integrated system of military capabilities through procurement, officer education, training, practice and other similar factors.

The conferees believe that the core faculty of this center should be comprised of scholars capable of providing diverse perspectives on Chinese political, strategic, and military thought and demonstrate competencies and capabilities relating to the above research areas. A substantial number of center scholars should be competent in the Chinese language. Additionally, linguistics and translation support should be available to this center.

The conferees agree that this center should conduct an active conference program and the core faculty should ideally visit China and the region at least once per year.

Asia-Pacific Center for Security Studies (sec. 915)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1040) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to waive reimbursement of the costs of conferences, seminars, courses of instruction, or similar educational activities of the Asia-Pacific Center for military officers and civilian officials of foreign nations of the Asia-Pacific region if the Secretary determines that attendance by these persons is in the national security interests of the United States. The amendment would permit the Secretary of Defense to accept, on behalf of the United States, foreign gifts or donations in order to defray the costs of, or enhance the operation of, the Asia-Pacific Center.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would only permit the Secretary of Defense to accept, on behalf of the United States, foreign gifts or donations in order to defray the costs of, or enhance the operation of, the Asia-Pacific Center.

Subtitle C—Personnel Management

Revisions to limitations on number of personnel assigned to major Department of Defense headquarters activities (sec. 921)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 901) that would amend section 130a of title 10, United States Code, as amended by section 911 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1998, to require a 35 percent reduction of management headquarters and headquarters support activities (MHA) personnel, using as a baseline the number of MHA personnel in the Department of Defense as of October 1, 1989, in lieu of the current required 25 percent reduction based on an October 1, 1997, baseline.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 903) that would require the Secretary of Defense to implement a revised directive, to be applied uniformly throughout the Department of Defense, that accounts for management headquarters personnel by function rather than organization.

The House recedes with an amendment that would codify the current, revised definition of management headquarters and would require a 15 percent reduction, five percent per year for three years, from the personnel levels resulting from implementation of the new, revised definition.

Defense acquisition workforce reductions (sec. 922)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 904) that would reduce the defense acquisition workforce, as defined in section 931(d) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1999 (Public Law 105-261), by a total of 25,000 in fiscal year 2000.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of Defense to implement reductions in the acquisition and support workforce not less than the number by which that workforce is programmed to be reduced in the fiscal year 2000 President's budget, unless the Secretary determines and certifies to Congress that changed circumstances would require a lesser reduction. This waiver must be in the national security interest of the United States and may not reduce the required reduction by more than ten percent.

The conferees understand that the President's Budget for fiscal year 2000 reflects a planned reduction of approximately 15,800 full-time equivalents in the defense acquisition workforce based upon the definition contained in 931(d) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1999 (Public Law 105-261). The conferees note, however, that significant acquisition workforce reductions have already been made. According to the Department, the acquisition workforce will have been reduced by 55 percent from 1989 to 2001. The conferees believe that any future acquisition workforce reductions are dependent on the ability of the Department of Defense to ensure that the taxpayer is adequately protected from fraud, waste, and mismanagement, and that the Department is able to continue to maintain a quality workforce.

Monitoring and reporting requirements regarding operations tempo and personnel tempo (sec. 923)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 906) that would require the Secretary of Defense to monitor personnel tempo and operations tempo of the armed services. The provision would also direct the Secretary to work toward a common definition to measure personnel tempo and operations tempo, to the maximum extent practicable, in order to have a more accurate measurement system. The House amendment also contained a provision (sec. 1035) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to report on various aspects of operations tempo and personnel tempo in his annual report to Congress.

The Senate bill contained no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would merge the two provisions and make clarifying changes.

Administration of Defense Reform Initiative enterprise program for military manpower and personnel information (sec. 924)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 584) that would require the Secretary of Defense to designate the Secretary of the Navy as the executive agent for carrying out the defense reform initiative enterprise pilot program for military manpower and personnel information as established in section 8147 of the Department of Defense Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1999.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to designate the Secretary of the Navy as the executive agent for carrying out the defense reform initiative enterprise pilot program for military manpower and personnel information as established in section 8147 of the Department of Defense Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1999.

The conferees note that the defense reform initiative enterprise pilot program for military manpower and personnel information was established in the Department of Defense Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1999 and enjoys the continued support of the Secretary of Defense. This pilot program represents a shift from the previous disparate personnel systems to a common, integrated system to manage manpower and personnel information. In addition, this program should reduce the infrastructure needed to support military human resource management programs. As such, the conferees support continued emphasis on this important project.

Payment of tuition for education and training of members in the defense acquisition workforce (sec. 925)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 538) that would permit payment of tuition for education and training of military personnel in the acquisition workforce on the same basis as civilian personnel in the acquisition workforce.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would make the payment of tuition effective upon enactment and clarify that the provision would not be retroactive.

Subtitle D—Other Matters

Additional matters for annual report on joint warfighting experimentation (sec. 931)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 902) that would amend section 485(b) title 10, United States Code, by adding matters to be included in the annual report on joint war fighting experimentation.

The House amendment (sec. 909) contained a similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would also require recommendations for mission needs statements, operational requirements, and relative priorities for acquisition programs to meet joint requirements to be included in the annual report.

Oversight of Department of Defense activities to combat terrorism (sec. 932)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1007) that would set forth separately the amounts authorized to be appropriated in titles I, II and III for the programs of the Department of Defense to combat terrorism and would transfer those funds to a Central Transfer Account (CTA). The funds transferred to the CTA would be funds identified by the Department as funds to combat terrorism, including funds for combating weapons of mass destruction and additional funds for Rapid Assessment and Initial Detection (RAID) teams. The provision would also direct the Secretary of Defense, beginning with the fiscal year 2001 budget submission, to set forth separately all funds for combating terrorism within its overall budget request to Congress.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would: (1) require the Secretary of Defense to submit to the congressional defense committees a report on all programs and activities of the Department of Defense combating terrorism program, including the definitions used by the Department for all terms relating to combating terrorism; (2) require the Secretary to submit to Congress a consolidated budget justification display that includes all programs and activities of the Department of Defense combating terrorism program; and, (3) require the Secretary to submit a semiannual obligation report to the congressional defense committees on the Department's combating terrorism program.

The conferees believe that this provision will give the Department's combating terrorism mission the focus and visibility it requires. The conferees further believe that the information required by this provision will greatly assist the Congress in its effort to conduct thorough oversight of the Department's combating terrorism program.

Responsibilities and accountability for certain financial management functions (sec. 933)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1009) that would place responsibility for the Department of Defense to receive an unqualified opinion on financial statements with the Under Secretary of Defense (Comptroller) and add this requirement to section 135 of title 10, United States Code. The provision also requires the Under Secretary of Defense (Comptroller) to prescribe regulations governing the use of credit cards and setting forth controls on the alteration of remittance addresses.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would not require the permanent change to title 10, United States Code.

Management of Civil Air Patrol (sec. 934)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 904) that would require an audit and investigation of the management practices of the Civil Air Patrol. The audit and investigation would be conducted by the Comptroller General of the United States and the Department of Defense Inspector General.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Employment and compensation of civilian faculty members of Department of Defense African Center for Strategic Studies

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 908) that would authorize the Department of Defense to hire civilian faculty members for the United States European Command African Center for Strategic Studies.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees do not intend to impede the development of the African Center for Strategic Studies (ACSS) by denying this authority at this time. However, the conferees believe that further planning and development of the ACSS is needed before such authority is authorized and note that currently, the ACSS is a virtual center without a permanent facility and only a limited number of seminars planned through fiscal year 2004.

Limitation on amount available for contracted advisory and assistance services

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 901) that would reduce Advisory and Assistance Services (A&AS) funding by $100.0 million in fiscal year 2000 and withhold an additional 10 percent of A&AS funding until the Department submits the first annual report under section 2212(c) of title 10, United States Code.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

TITLE X—GENERAL PROVISIONS

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Airfield safety database

The conferees note that the commission that investigated aircraft safety issues in the wake of the CT–43 crash in Bosnia that killed Commerce Secretary Ron Brown found that no airfield obstruction database exists and that, as a result, the National Imagery and Mapping Agency (NIMA) has taken the lead to use imagery to accurately create such a database. In addition, the conferees note that industry is developing navigation equipment that can use this data. To date, NIMA, in coordination with the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA), has identified a requirement to include over 1,000 airfields worldwide in this database. Given the critical aviation safety issues associated with this effort, the conferees recognize a compelling need to expeditiously complete it.

Therefore, the conferees direct the director of NIMA to develop a comprehensive program that would create three dimensional terrain and obstruction data for each airfield identified in the requirement on an accelerated basis. The director shall coordinate his efforts with the FAA to ensure that the data conforms to applicable flight standards and certification requirements. The director shall also provide a plan for such a program to the Senate Committee on Armed Services, House Committee on Armed Services, House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence and the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence that identifies requirements and issues associated with the program by January 31, 2000.

Education Partnership Agreements

The conferees note that questions have arisen over the implementation of the authority provided to the Secretary of Defense in sections 2194, title 10, United States Code, to enter into education partnership agreements with educational institutions. The conferees encourage the Secretary to review and report to the congressional defense committees by December 31, 1999 on any recommendations to simplify the review and transfer process for surplus scientific equipment and computers.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Financial Matters

Transfer authority (sec. 1001)

The House amendment contained an identical provision.

The conference agreement includes this provision.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1003) that would authorize only military personnel appropriations for fiscal year 2000 provided in the 1999 Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act (Public Law 106–31).

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize appropriations made available upon enactment of the 1999 Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act (Public Law 106–31). The amendment would also extend authorization to contingent defense appropriations contained in the Act only if the President submits an amended budget request that designates the requirement for these appropriations as an emergency and is consistent with the intended uses specified in the Act.

Supplemental appropriations request for operations in Yugoslavia (sec. 1004)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1006) that would require the President to transmit to the Congress a supplemental appropriations request for the Department of Defense for the costs of any combat or peacekeeping operations in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia that the President determines are in the national security interest of the United States.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

United States contribution to NATO common-funded budgets in fiscal year 2000 (sec. 1005)

The Senate bill contained several provisions (sec. 211, 311, and 1008) that would specifically authorize the U.S. contribution to

NATO common-funded budgets for fiscal year 2000, including the use of unexpended balances from previous years. Such an authorization is required by section 3(2)(C)(ii) of the resolution of ratification for the Protocols to the North Atlantic Treaty of 1949 on the Accession of Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic for each fiscal year that the U.S. payments to the common-funded budgets of NATO exceed the amount paid by the United States in fiscal year 1998.

The House amendment contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes with an amendment that would combine the three provisions contained in the Senate bill into one provision to authorize the U.S. contribution to the common-funded budgets of NATO for fiscal year 2000.

(1) direct that, to the maximum extent possible, the Secretary of the Navy shall require, as a condition of transfer, that repair and refurbishment associated with the transfer be accomplished in a shipyard located in the United States; and

(2) stipulate that the authority to transfer these vessels will expire at the end of a two-year period that begins on the date of enactment of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2000.

Subtitle C—Support for Civilian Law Enforcement and Counter Drug Activities

The budget request for drug interdiction and other counter-drug activities of the Department of Defense (DOD) totals $954.6 million. This includes the $788.1 million central transfer account and $166.5 million in the operating budgets of the military services for authorized counter-drug operations.

The conferees recommend the following budget for the Department's counter-narcotics activities:

Drug Interdiction & Counter-drug Activities, Operations and Maintenance

(In thousands of dollars)

(May not add due to rounding)

Fiscal Year 2000 Drug and Counter-drug Request	$954,600

Decreases:
Ground Based Radars ..	1,000
Total	1,012,800
Transfers (To MILCON):
Forward Operating Locations	42,800

Forward operating locations

The conferees support the proposed creation of forward operating locations (FOLs) to replace the capability lost with the closure of Howard Air Force Base in Panama. The conferees understand the importance of these sites to the continuing ability of the armed forces and law enforcement agencies to effectively wage the war against drugs in the source and transit zones. Therefore, the conferees recommend a transfer of $42.8 million to the defense-wide military construction account to make necessary modifications to existing facilities that will house these FOLs.

Technologies assessment

The conferees understand that currently deployed technologies such as the Relocatable Over-The-Horizon Radar (ROTHR) system in use for counter-drug detection and monitoring are not capable against all methods of transportation. The conferees are concerned that a significant portion of all cocaine smuggled through the transit zone moves by maritime means into Central America and then over the southwest border. Therefore, in recognition of this serious operational shortfall, the conferees recommend $4.0 million to assess alternative technologies to detect air, land, and maritime drug trafficking platforms.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Plan regarding assignment of military personnel to assist Immigration and Naturalization Service and Customs Service (sec. 1027)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1024) that would authorize the deployment of military personnel to border locations to assist members of the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the U.S. Customs Service.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1034) that would require the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs to provide the Congress with an annual assessment of the risk associated with performing the National Military Strategy.

In addition, the conferees understand the Joint Chiefs of Staff are considering whether to establish requirements for float-on/float-off (FLO/FLO) vessels for joint service rapid deployment. The Secretary of Defense is directed to include the following in a report to the Congress on the mobility requirements review: (1) the cargo, and the relative priority of cargo, that would require FLO/FLO vessel capability; (2) the requirements for FLO/FLO vessels to carry such cargo, including any requirement for FLO/FLO vessels with dockwalls; and (3) an estimate of the funding required to meet any such requirements. The conferees agree to change the report horizon to 2005, and require a follow-on report focusing on intra-theater lift.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Subtitle E—Information Security

Identification in budget materials of amounts for declassification activities and limitation on expenditures for such activities (sec. 1041)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1031) that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish a new budgetary line item for the declassification activities of the Department of Defense and limit expenditures for such activities to $20,000,000 in fiscal year 2000.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

The provision would clarify the activities to be covered by the new budgetary line item. The conferees anticipate that the identification of declassification funding as a budgetary line item in accordance with the requirements of this subsection will better enable Congress in future years to establish appropriate levels for such expenditures.

The Department has provided the conferees with the following estimates for planned declassification expenditures of major components of the Department under the provisions in 3.4 of Executive Order 12958 for fiscal year 2000: National Security Agency, $10.0 million; Defense Intelligence Agency, $1.0 million; Army, $16.0 million; Navy, $16.0 million; and Air Force, $8.0 million.

The provision would prohibit expenditures for the specified activities in excess of these planned levels. It is not intended as a limitation on indirect declassification expenditures in accounts other than those identified by the Department and listed above. The conferees direct the Department to report to Congress not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act on any such expenditures that the Department expects to incur in fiscal year 2000.

The provision would prohibit the automatic declassification of records that have not yet been reviewed for declassification unless the Secretary certifies to Congress that such declassification would not harm the national security. The conferees are aware that the needless classification of records that are no longer sensitive can impose costs, and undermine the credibility of the classification system. The conferees do not believe that it would be in the national security interest of the United States to declassify records that would otherwise remain classified, simply because the review of those records has not yet been completed.

The provision would require the Secretary to report to Congress on whether the Department will be able to meet any date established for automatic declassification of records. If the Secretary reports that the Department will be unable to meet any such date, the conferees expect that the Administration would propose, and Congress would enact, a further extension.

The conferees are concerned with reports over the last three years of inadequate or incorrect declassification decisions of the Department and other agencies that may have resulted in the release of information that could harm the national security. The conferees expect the Department to conduct the declassification process in a careful manner which provides adequate time to review records and make decisions consistent with the national security interests of the United States.

Notice to congressional committees of certain security and counterintelligence failures within defense programs (sec. 1042)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1032) that would require notification of the congressional defense committees of any information that indicates that classified information relating to defense programs of the United States may have been compromised to a foreign power.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment clarifying that the notification requirement applies to security failures or the compromise of classified information that the Secretary of Defense considers likely to cause significant harm or damage to the national security interests of the United States. The amendment would also provide for the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives to take appropriate steps to protect sensitive information received as a result of such notifications.

Information Assurance Initiative (sec. 1043)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1047) that would require the Department to establish: (1) an information assurance roadmap to guide the development of appropriate organizational structures and technologies; and (2) an information assurance testbed to provide an integrated organizational structure within DOD to plan and facilitate the conduct of simulations, wargames, exercises, and experiments, and to serve as a means by which the Department can conduct integrated or joint exercises and experiments with civil and commercial organizations. The provision would also authorize an increase of $120.0 million for various information assurance programs and activities.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would establish an information assurance program and an information assurance testbed. The conferees address information assurance funding elsewhere in this conference report.

Nondisclosure of information on personnel of overseas, sensitive, or routinely deployable units (sec. 1044)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1052) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense and, with respect to the Coast Guard when it is not operating under the Navy, the Secretary of Transportation to withhold from disclosure to the public the name, rank, duty address, official title, and pay information of personnel assigned to units that are sensitive, routinely deployable, or overseas.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Nondisclosure of certain operational files of the National Imagery and Mapping Agency (sec. 1045)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1053) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to withhold from public disclosure certain operational files of the former National Photographic Interpretation Center of the Central Intelligence Agency, which were transferred in 1996 to the National Imagery and Mapping Agency (NIMA). Such files would be protected from search, review, publication, or public disclosure to the same extent as originally provided for under section 701 of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 431).

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1066) that would prohibit the return of veterans memorial objects to foreign nations unless specifically authorized by law.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would place a moratorium on returning veterans memorial objects to foreign nations without specific authorization in law until September 30, 2001.

Program to commemorate 50th anniversary of the Korean War (sec. 1052)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1058) that would authorize the expenditure of up to $7.0 million for the United States of America Korean War Commemoration during fiscal years 2000 through 2004. This limitation would be in addition to the expenditures of any local commander to commemorate the Korean War from funds available to that command.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would delete the reference to expenditures by a unit of the armed forces or similar organization to commemorate the Korean War. The conferees note that inclusion of such reference is unnecessary.

Commemoration of the victory of freedom in the Cold War (sec. 1053)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1086) that would establish a commission and a medal to honor those who served in the U.S. Armed Forces during the Cold War. The provision would also establish November 9, 1999 as "Victory in the Cold War Day" and authorize $15.0 million for the participation of the armed forces in a celebration on that date.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the commission to identify a date suitable for celebration of the U.S. victory in the Cold War and make recommendations to the Department of Defense on how to celebrate that victory. The provision would further authorize up to $5.0 million for military participation in such a celebration.

Subtitle G—Other Matters

Defense Science Board task force on use of television and radio as a propaganda instrument in time of military conflict (sec. 1061)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1048) that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish a task force of the Defense Science Board to examine the use of radio and television broadcasting as a propaganda instrument and the adequacy of the capabilities of the U.S. armed forces to deal with situations such as the conflict in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The task force would submit its report containing its assessments to the Secretary of Defense, not later than February 1, 2000. The Secretary would submit the report, together with his comments and recommendations, to the congressional defense committees, not later than March 1, 2000.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Assessment of electromagnetic spectrum reallocation (sec. 1062)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1049) that would require that any system licensed to operate on portions of the frequency spectrum currently used by the Department of Defense (DOD) be designed in such a way as to ensure that it neither interferes with, nor receives interference from, the military systems of the DOD that are operating in those bands. The provision would further require that any costs associated with the redesign of military systems for the purpose of moving them from a frequency for use by another system, public or private, be paid by the entity whose system or systems are displacing the military system.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize the surrender of frequencies where DOD currently has the primary assignment, only if the Secretary of Defense and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the Secretary of Commerce, jointly certify to Congress that the surrender of such portions of the spectrum will not degrade essential military capability. Alternative frequencies, with the necessary comparable technical characteristics, would have to be identified and made available to the DOD, if necessary, to restore the essential military capability that will be lost as a result of the surrender of the original spectrum. Essential military capability is that capability provided by the use or planned use of that portion of the spectrum, as of the date of the proposed allocation. In addition, the provision would require that 8 MHz that were identified for auction in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997, be reassigned to the Federal Government for primary use by the DOD. The conferees urge the Secretary of Defense to share such frequencies with state and local government public safety radio services, to the extent that such sharing will not result in harmful interference between the DOD systems and the public safety systems proposed for operation on those frequencies. This provision would not otherwise change the requirement for the Federal Communications Commission to auction the remaining frequencies that were identified for reallocation pursuant to the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993 or the Balanced Budget Act of 1997.

The provision would further provide for an interagency review, and assessment and report to Congress and the President on the progress made in implementation of national spectrum planning, the reallocation of Federal Government spectrum to non-Federal use, and the implications of such reallocations to the affected federal agencies, which would include the effects of the reallocation on critical military and intelligence capabilities, civil space programs, and other Federal Government systems used to protect public safety.

Title XII—Matters Relating to Other Nations

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Matters Relating to the People's Republic of China

Limitation on military-to-military exchanges and contacts with Chinese People's Liberation Army (sec. 1201)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1034) requiring the Secretary of Defense to submit a detailed report by March 31, 2000 on military-to-military contacts with the People's Republic of China since January 1, 1993.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1203) that would prohibit the Secretary of Defense from authorizing any military-to-military exchange or contact by the U.S. armed forces with the Peoples' Liberation Army that would involve a series of operations and activities; require the Secretary of Defense to certify to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives by December 31 of each year as to whether or not there were any violations of the prohibition and to report by June 1 of each year providing an assessment of the current state of such military-to-military contacts.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would establish "national security risk" as the criterion to be applied by the Secretary of Defense in assessing the appropriateness of military-to-military contacts with the People's Liberation Army and merge the one-time Senate reporting requirement with the House provision.

Annual report on military power of the People's Republic of China (sec. 1202)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1209) that would require the Secretary of Defense to prepare an annual report, in both classified and unclassified form, on the current and future military strategy and capabilities of the People's Republic of China.

Subtitle B—Matters Relating to the Balkans

Department of Defense report on the conduct of Operation Allied Force and associated relief operations (sec. 1211)

On March 24, 1999, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) initiated the first large-scale, offensive military operation in its 50-year history with air strikes against targets in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY). This NATO air campaign, Operation Allied Force, ended on June 10, 1999, following the signing of the Military Technical Agreement by representatives of the FRY and confirmation by NATO that the withdrawal of Serb forces from Kosovo had begun.

The lessons learned during this 78-day military operation could have far-reaching implications for U.S. military strategy, doctrine, and force planning for years to come. The conferees believe that the Congress must have detailed information and analysis concerning Operation Allied Force in order to apply the lessons learned from that military campaign to future defense funding and policy decisions. Therefore, the conferees have included a provision that would require the Secretary of Defense to submit a comprehensive report to the congressional defense committees by January 31, 2000, on the conduct of NATO's military operations against the FRY and associated relief operations in the Balkan theater of operations. A preliminary report on the conduct of those operations would be submitted by October 15, 1999.

Sense of Congress regarding the need for vigorous prosecution of war crimes, genocide, and crimes against humanity in the former Republic of Yugoslavia (sec. 1212)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1061) that would express the sense of Congress that the United States and other nations should provide sufficient resources for an expeditious and thorough investigation of allegations of war crimes committed in Kosovo and elsewhere in the former Republic of Yugoslavia; that the United States, through its intelligence services, should provide all possible cooperation in gathering evidence to secure the indictment of those responsible for the commission of war crimes, crimes against humanity, and genocide in the former Yugoslavia; that where the evidence warrants, indictments for war crimes should be issued against suspects regardless of their position within the Serbian leadership; that the United States and all nations have an obligation to honor arrest warrants issued by the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, and should use all appropriate means to apprehend war criminals already under indictment; and that NATO should not accept any diplomatic resolution of the conflict in Kosovo that would bar the indictment, apprehension or prosecution of war criminals for crimes committed during operations in Kosovo.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1207) that would outline the goals of the United States for the conflict with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, including two goals related to war crimes. Concerning war crimes, the provision would declare that President Milosevic be held accountable for his actions as President that have resulted in the deaths of tens of thousands of people and responsibility for murder, rape, terrorism, destruction, and ethnic cleansing; and that individuals in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia who are guilty of war crimes in Kosovo should be brought to justice through the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia.

The House recedes with clarifying amendments, and with additions to the findings that incorporate the two goals related to war crimes contained in section 1207 of the House amendment.

Subtitle C—Matters Relating to NATO and Other Allies

Legal effect of the new Strategic Concept of NATO (sec. 1221)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1063) that would require the President to determine and certify to the Senate whether or not the new Strategic Concept of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) imposes any new commitments or obligations on the United States. In addition, the provision would express the sense of the Senate that, if the President certifies that the new Strategic Concept imposes any new commitments or obligations on the United States, the President should submit the new Strategic Concept to the Senate as a treaty for the Senate's advice and consent. Finally, the provision requires the President to submit a report to the Senate containing an analysis of the potential threats facing NATO in the first decade of the next millennium, particularly those threats which would be beyond the borders of NATO member nations.

The report would include an assessment of the risks to the successful execution of the national military strategy related to the capabilities of allied armed forces.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Attendance at professional military education schools by military personnel of the new member nations of NATO (sec. 1223)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1206) that would prohibit the expenditure of funds for the deployment of U.S. Armed Forces in Haiti except for: (a) deployment pursuant to Operation Uphold Democracy until December 31, 1999; (2) periodic, noncontinuous theater engagement activities on or after January 1, 2000; and (3) deployment for a limited, customary presence necessary for the security of U.S. diplomatic facilities in Haiti and to carry out defense liaison activities. The provision would require the President to report to Congress within 48 hours after a deployment for periodic, noncontinuous theater engagement activities on or after January 1, 2000. Finally, the provision would contain a rule of construction stating that nothing in the provision shall be construed to restrict the President's authority in emergency circumstances to protect the lives of U.S. citizens or facilities or property in Haiti.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would limit the prohibition on the expenditure of funds to the continuous deployment of U.S. Armed Forces in Haiti pursuant to Operation Uphold Democracy subsequent to May 31, 2000, and would require the President to report to Congress within 96 hours after a deployment to Haiti subsequent to May 31, 2000.

Sense of Congress regarding the continuation of sanctions against Libya (sec. 1234)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1068) that would make it the Sense of the Congress that the President should use all diplomatic means necessary, including the use of the United States veto at the United Nations Security Council, to prevent the Security Council from lifting sanctions against Libya until Libya fulfills all of the conditions set forth in United Nations Security Council Resolutions 731, 748, and 883.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Annual reports on security in the Taiwan Strait

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1075) that would require the Secretary of Defense to submit to the appropriate congressional committees an annual report, in both classified and unclassified form, detailing the security situation in the Taiwan Strait.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees agree to include this reporting requirement within the reporting requirement contained in section 1202 of this Act.

Goals for the conflict with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1207) that would declare the goals of the United States for the conflict with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to be: a cessation of all military action by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) against the people of Kosovo; the withdrawal of all FRY forces from Kosovo; an agreement by the FRY government to the stationing of an international military presence in Kosovo, to the safe return to Kosovo of all refugees, to the unhindered access by humanitarian aid organizations to the refugees, and to work for a political framework agreement for Kosovo that is in conformity with international law; that President Milosevic will be held accountable for his actions; and that individuals in the FRY who are guilty of war crimes in Kosovo will be brought to justice through the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees note that many of the goals contained in the provision in the House amendment have been achieved by a combination of the Serb Parliament's adoption on June 3, 1999, of the principles adopted by the Group of Eight (G–8) Foreign Ministers on May 6, 1999, the signing of the Military Technical Agreement on June 9, 1999, and subsequent actions in Kosovo. The remaining goals regarding President Milosevic and war criminals have been incorporated into another provision. Therefore, the conferees believe that this provision is no longer necessary.

TITLE XIII—COOPERATIVE THREAT REDUCTION WITH STATES OF THE FORMER SOVIET UNION

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Cooperative Threat Reduction (CTR) program (secs. 1301–1312)

The budget request included $475.5 million for the Cooperative Threat Reduction (CTR) program.

The Senate bill would authorize the budget request, and contained provisions (secs. 1044, 1045, and 1085) that would: require the President to recertify the eligibility of recipient countries for CTR assistance; adjust the deadline for submission of the annual report on accounting for CTR assistance; and require the inclusion in that report of information relating to Russia's arsenal of tactical nuclear weapons.

The House amendment would authorize $444.1 million for the CTR program for fiscal year 2000, a $31.4 million decrease to the budget request and contained provisions (secs. 1301–1309) that would: allocate fiscal year 2000 funding for various CTR programs and activities; limit the availability of CTR funds; prohibit the use of funds for specific activities; prohibit the use of funds for a chemical weapons destruction facility in Russia and reallocate a portion of these funds to security enhancements at Russia's chemical weapons storage sites; increase funding for strategic offensive elimination projects in Russia and Ukraine and for security enhancements at Russia's nuclear weapons storage sites; limit CTR funding for a fissile material storage facility and for biological weapons proliferation prevention activities in Russia until various reports, notifications, and certifications are received by Congress; and require a report on the Expanded Threat Reduction Initiative.

The conferees agree to a series of provisions that would authorize the budget request of $475.5 million for the CTR program to include $177.3 million for strategic offensive arms elimination in Russia, $41.8 million for strategic nuclear arms elimination in Ukraine, $9.3 million for activities to support warhead dismantlement processing in Russia, $20.0 million for security enhancements at chemical weapons storage sites in Russia, $15.2 million for weapons transportation security in Russia, $64.5 million for planning, design, and construction of a storage facility for Russian fissile material, $99.0 million for weapons storage security in Russia, $32.2 million for development of a cooperative program with the Government of Russia to eliminate the production of weapons-grade plutonium at Russian reactors, $12.0 million for biological weapons proliferation prevention activities in Russia, $1.8 million for activities designated as other assessments and administrative support, and $2.3 million for military to military contacts. The conferees also agree to limit the availability of CTR funds, establish sublimits for CTR activities, and provide the Secretary of Defense limited authority to exceed these sublimits for fiscal year 2000, pending appropriate Congressional notification.

In addition, the conferees agree to make permanent the long-standing prohibition on the use of CTR funds for: peacekeeping activities with Russia; the provision of housing; environmental restoration assistance; job retraining; and defense conversion activities. The conferees also agree to a prohibition on the use of fiscal year 2000 CTR funds for the elimination of conventional weapons and delivery vehicles primarily intended to deliver these weapons. The conferees believe that the CTR program should remain focused on eliminating the threat posed by weapons of mass destruction and their delivery vehicles in the former Soviet Union. This provision would not restrict or otherwise prohibit the destruction of delivery vehicles that are primarily intended for delivery of weapons of mass destruction.

The conferees are troubled by the fact that the United States is increasingly absorbing a greater share of the costs of the CTR program as a result of Russia's economic difficulties and are concerned that the Department of Defense is agreeing to offset Russia's financial obligations. The conferees believe that the Department should notify the Congress whenever the United States is confronted with a request or decision to absorb an additional share of CTR funding that Russia has indicated it cannot provide.

The conferees agree to include a provision that would prohibit fiscal year 2000 funds, as well as funding for future years, from being used for the planning, design, or construction of a chemical weapons destruction facility in Shchuch'ye, Russia. The conferees agree to take this action this year in light of significant cost, schedule, and other concerns highlighted in a recent General Accounting Office (GAO) report. The GAO report concluded that this project will cost more, take longer, and achieve less national security benefit for the United States than originally anticipated. The conferees are also troubled by Russia's apparent inability to fund adequately the necessary infrastructure costs that are associated with this chemical weapons destruction effort. The conferees recognize the proliferation and other risks associated with Russia's massive stockpile of chemical munitions. The conferees believe, however, that the more immediate goals of U.S. nonproliferation policy will be better served in the near term by redirecting CTR resources away from the costly, long-term Shchuch'ye project and toward helping to ensure that Russian chemical weapons are effectively safeguarded against the risk of theft or diversion. For this reason, the conferees have provided funds to initiate enhanced security measures at Russia's chemical weapons storage sites.

The conferees also agree to prohibit the obligation or expenditure of fiscal year 1999 CTR funds remaining available for obligation until the President re-certifies the eligibility of the recipient countries for CTR assistance.

In light of concerns over nuclear transparency arrangements, the conferees also agree to condition future funding for the second wing of a fissile material storage facility in Russia on several certifications and the negotiation of a signed transparency agreement with Russia that ensures that material stored at the facility has been removed from dismantled nuclear weapons.

Finally, the conferees agree to limit the use of fiscal year 2000 CTR funds pending the submission to Congress by the Secretary of Defense of a report on executive agency responsibilities for executing CTR programs and an updated multiyear CTR program plan. The conferees also require the submission to Congress of various other reports dealing with: individual CTR projects and how those projects are prioritized within the Department of Defense; international financial contributions to the CTR program; related tactical nuclear weapons issues; and the Expanded Threat Reduction Initiative.

TITLE XIV—PROLIFERATION AND EXPORT CONTROLS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Adherence of People's Republic of China to Missile Technology Control Regime (sec. 1401)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1073) that expressed the sense of Congress that the President should take all actions appropriate to obtain a bilateral agreement with the People's Republic of China (PRC) to adhere to the Missile Technology Control Regime (MTCR) and annex and that the PRC should not be permitted to join the MTCR without having demonstrated a sustained and verified commitment to the non-proliferation of missiles and missile technology.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1401) that would require a report on compliance by the PRC and other countries with the MTCR.

The House recedes with an amendment that would merge the Senate and House provisions.

Annual report on transfers of militarily sensitive technology to countries and entities of concern (sec. 1402)

The House bill contained several provisions (sec. 1402, 1410, 1412, 1414) that would establish reporting requirements relative to the transfer of militarily sensitive technology to the Peoples' Republic of China and other countries of concern.

The Senate bill contained a related reporting requirement (sec. 1072(c)).

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would consolidate the reporting requirements into a single section. The consolidated section would require an annual report on transfers of the most significant categories of U.S. technology and technical information with potential military applications to countries and entities of concern. Countries and entities of concern are defined to include China, Russia, terrorist states, entities directed and controlled by any of these countries, and entities engaged in international terrorism.

Subsection (c) of the provision would require an assessment by designated agency Inspectors General of the adequacy of current export controls and counterintelligence measures to protect against the acquisition by countries and entities of concern of U.S. technology and technical information with potential military applications. The conferees note that the Inspectors General recently completed a comprehensive report on the adequacy of export controls. The conferees expect that, rather than repeating this work, the Inspectors General will focus on the adequacy of counterintelligence measures in this context.

Resources for export license functions (sec. 1403)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1403) that would require a report on implementation of the transfer of satellite export control authority to the State Department and a provision (sec. 1413) that would require that adequate resources be allocated to the Office of Defense Trade Controls at the State Department and the Defense Threat Reduction Agency at the Department of Defense for their respective export licensing functions.

The Senate bill contained no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would merge the two provisions and modify the reporting requirement.

Security in connection with satellite export licensing (sec. 1404)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 1404) that would require the Secretary of State to take a number of steps to provide enhanced security in connection with the launch of satellites outside the jurisdiction of the United States. The provision would also establish several requirements regarding Department of Defense launch monitors.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision on security in connection with satellite launches.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would clarify that the provision does not expand the requirement for a technology transfer control plan in section 1514(a)(1) of the Strom Thurmond National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1999, to launches in any country not already subject to such section. The amendment also provides that individuals providing security for overseas launches need not be employed by the Department of Defense, but must report directly to a launch monitor employed by the Department with regard to all issues relevant to the technology transfer control plan.

The requirements for launch monitors in the House and Senate bills were combined and addressed elsewhere in the Act.

Reporting of technology transmitted to People's Republic of China and of foreign launch security violations. (sec. 1405)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1405) that would require space launch monitors of the Department of Defense to maintain records of all information authorized to be transmitted to the People's Republic of China in connection with space launches that they are responsible for monitoring.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Report on national security implications of exporting high-performance computers to the People's Republic of China (sec. 1406)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1406) that would require an annual report on the national security implications of exporting high-performance computers to the People's Republic of China. The provision would also require empirical testing of the extent to which national security-related operations can be performed using clustered, massively-parallel processing or other combinations of computers.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would: (1) require empirical testing only to the extent that such testing has not already been done; and (2) sunset the reporting requirement after five years.

End-use verification for use by People's Republic of China of high-performance computers (sec. 1407)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1407) that would direct the President to seek to enter into an agreement with the People's Republic of China to provide for an open and transparent system, including at a minimum on-site inspection without notice by U.S. nationals designated by the U.S. government, for effective end-use verification of high-performance computers exported or to be exported to China.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would delete the requirement for on-site inspection without notice by U.S. nationals designated by the U.S. government. Such inspection methods should be a goal of the negotiations, but the conferees recognize that this goal may not be possible to achieve.

Enhanced multilateral export controls (sec. 1408)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1411) that would require the President to work to establish binding new international controls on technology transfers that threaten international peace and U.S. national security and would create an Office of Technology Security within the Department of Defense.

The Senate had no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would clarify the negotiating objective and delete the requirement to create an Office of Technology Security within the Department of Defense.

Enhancement of activities of Defense Threat Reduction Agency (sec. 1409)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1070) that would require the Secretary of Defense to prescribe regulations to: (1) enhance the authority of, and establish appropriate qualifications for, the Defense Threat Reduction Agency (DTRA) personnel who monitor satellite launch campaigns overseas; (2) allocate funds to DTRA to prevent shortfalls in the number of launch monitors; (3) establish a reimbursement mechanism for payment of costs related to monitoring of launch campaigns; (4) improve guidelines on the scope of permissible discussions with foreign persons regarding technology; (5) provide annual briefings to U.S. commercial satellite industry personnel on export license standards; and (6) establish a records management and preservation system for reports prepared in connection with the monitoring of launch campaigns.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1404) that would require the Secretary to: (1) ensure that launch monitors have sufficient training; (2) ensure that an adequate number of monitors are assigned to each space launch; (3) take steps to provide for the continuity of service by monitors for the entire launch campaign; and (4) take measures to make service as a monitor an attractive career opportunity. The House provision would also require the Secretary of State to ensure that an appropriate technology transfer control plan and security arrangements are in place as a condition of the export license for the launch of a U.S. satellite outside the United States.

The House recedes with an amendment that would merge the Senate provision with the House provision addressing requirements for launch monitors. The House provision on launch security is addressed elsewhere in this Act.

Timely notification of licensing decisions by the Department of State (sec. 1410)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1071) that would require the Secretary of State to provide timely notice to the manufacturer of a commercial satellite of U.S. origin of the decision on an application for a license involving the overseas launch of such satellite.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Enhanced intelligence consultation on satellite license applications (sec. 1411)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1072) that would allow for enhanced participation by the intelligence community in the review of applications for a license involving the overseas launch of a commercial satellite of U.S. origin.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would clarify the role of the intelligence advisory group. The conferees direct that the appropriate committees for the receipt of the reports requested in the provision are the Senate Armed Services Committee, the House Armed Services Committee, the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and the House International Relations Committee.

Investigations of violations of export controls by United States satellite manufacturers (sec. 1412)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1069) that would require the President to notify Congress whenever an investigation is undertaken of an alleged violation of U.S. export control laws in connection with a commercial satellite of U.S. origin. The provision would also require notice of an export waiver granted on behalf of such a person, and would express the sense of Congress that an application for the export of a commercial satellite should include a notice of any such investigation. The provision contained an exception for cases in which the President determines that notification of Congress would jeopardize an on-going criminal investigation.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would make a number of modifications.

First, the conference amendment would limit the notification requirement to investigations that are undertaken by the Department of Justice. The conferees recognize that there are numerous entities both within the Department of Justice and outside the Department of Justice that may perform preliminary inquiries into alleged violations of the type covered by this section. The conferees understand that any covered violations that may be identified as a result of such preliminary inquiries are referred to the Department of Justice, and that the notification requirements of this provision would be triggered at that time.

Second, the conference amendment would clarify that notification should be made to the appropriate committees of Congress, and that these committees have an obligation to ensure that appropriate procedures are in place to protect from unauthorized disclosure classified information, information relating to intelligence sources and methods, and sensitive law enforcement information that is furnished to the committees. The conferees recognize that in the absence of such procedures, any notification of the committees could jeopardize the national security or the investigation and prosecution of criminal activities.

Third, the conference amendment would require the President to notify Congress of either: (1) an alleged violation of the export control laws in connection with a commercial satellite; or (2) an alleged violation of the export control laws in connection with an item controlled under the munitions list maintained by the Department of State, if that violation is likely to cause significant harm or damage to the national security interests of the United States.

Fourth, the conference amendment would require the Secretary of State and the Attorney General of the United States to develop appropriate mechanisms to identify, for the purposes of processing export licenses for commercial satellites, persons who are the subject of investigations of the type covered by the section. The conferees understand that the mechanisms developed to implement this provision would have safeguards built in to protect against the disclosure of information that could jeopardize an ongoing criminal prosecution.

Like the Senate provision, the conference amendment contains an exception for cases in which the President determines that notification of Congress would jeopardize an ongoing criminal investigation. For example, the conferees recognize that there may be cases in which it would be impossible to notify Congress of an ongoing investigation without violating rules of Grand Jury secrecy. The President would be required to provide written notification of any such determination (including a justification for the determination) to the congressional leadership.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Procedures for review of export of controlled technologies and items

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

TITLE XV—ARMS CONTROL AND COUNTERPROLIFERATION MATTERS

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

International border security

Among the efforts of the Department of Defense (DOD) to counter the threat of terrorist activities involving Weapons of Mass Destruction (WMD) or WMD materials, as well as the threat of proliferation of such weapons and materials, the conferees recognize the contribution being made by the International Border Security Training Program authorized in Sec. 1424 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997. At relatively low cost, DOD has worked with the Customs Service to train border security officials from throughout Central Europe and the Newly Independent States (NIS) of the former Soviet Union to enhance their capabilities to prevent the flow of WMD or associated materials across their borders. The value of this program has been demonstrated by seizures of sensitive materials in Eastern Europe, including nuclear reactor components destined for Iran and a small quantity of Uranium-235. The border security officials responsible for both of these seizures attribute their success to the training they received in this program. The conferees commend those responsible for the success of this program.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Revision to limitation on retirement or dismantlement of strategic nuclear delivery systems (sec. 1501)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1041) that would: (1) extend by one year section 1302 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1998 (Public Law 105-85) relating to the retirement or dismantlement of specified strategic nuclear delivery systems until the START II Treaty enters into force; and (2) provide for the reduction of a number of Trident submarines.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 1033) that would amend section 1302 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1998 to prohibit the retirement or dismantlement of specified strategic nuclear delivery systems unless the President makes certain certifications.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would: (1) amend section 1302 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1998 to prohibit the retirement or dismantlement of specified strategic nuclear delivery systems unless the President makes certain certifications; and (2) allow for the retirement of a number of Trident submarines if such certification is provided.

Sense of Congress on strategic arms reductions (sec. 1502)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1042) that would limit the use of funds during fiscal year 2000 to reduce specified strategic nuclear forces below the maximum number of those forces permitted the United States under the START II Treaty unless the President submits to Congress a report containing an assessment indicating that such reductions would not impede the capability of the United States to respond militarily to any militarily significant increase in the challenge to United States security or strategic stability posed by nuclear weapon modernization programs of the People's Republic of China or any other nation.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would express the sense of Congress that, in negotiating a START III Treaty with the Russian Federation, or any other arms control treaty with the Russian Federation that would require reductions in U.S. strategic nuclear forces, that: (1) the strategic nuclear forces and nuclear modernization programs of the People's Republic of China and other nations be taken into full consideration; and (2) the reductions in U.S. strategic nuclear forces should not be to such an extent as to impede the capability of the United States to respond militarily to any militarily significant increase in the threat to the United States posed by the People's Republic of China and any other nation.

Report on strategic stability under START III (sec. 1503)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1201) that would require the Secretary of Defense to prepare a report on strategic stability under START III.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Counterproliferation Program Review Committee (sec. 1504)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1043) that would extend the Counterproliferation Program Review Committee (CPRC) to September 30, 2004, advance the date on which the CPRC annual report is submitted to Congress from May 1 to February 1, and designate the Assistant Secretary of Defense, Strategy and Threat Reduction, to be the CPRC Executive Secretary.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would designate the Assistant Secretary of Defense, Strategy and Threat Reduction, to be the CPRC Executive Secretary during the time period in which the position of the Assistant to the Secretary of Defense, Nuclear, Chemical and Biological Defense, is vacant.

Support of United Nations-sponsored efforts to inspect and monitor Iraqi weapons activities (sec. 1505)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1046) that would extend, for one year, at current funding levels, the authority of the Department of Defense (DOD) to provide support to the United Nations Special Commission on Iraq (UNSCOM) under the Weapons of Mass Destruction Act of 1992.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 1202).

The House recedes with an amendment that would change the underlying Weapons of Mass Destruction Act of 1992 to make clear that the authority of DOD to support UNSCOM will also apply to any successor organization. The conferees believe that it is essential that weapons inspectors of the United Nations be allowed to resume activities in Iraq to ensure full Iraqi compliance with its international obligations to destroy its weapons of mass destruction and associated delivery systems.

The conferees support continued DOD assistance to this important effort.

TITLE XVI—NATIONAL SECURITY SPACE MATTERS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A-Space Technology Guide; Reports

Space technology guide (sec. 1601)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1025) that would require the Secretary of Defense to develop a detailed guide for investment in space science and technology, demonstrations of space technology, and planning and development for space technology systems.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to include a micro-satellite technology plan in the space technology guide.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of Defense to prepare a report on the current and potential vulnerabilities of U.S. national security and commercial space assets. The conferees note that other elements of the House provision are included within the scope of the Commission to Assess United States National Security Space Management and Organization, as addressed elsewhere in this Act.

Report on space launch failures (sec. 1603)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 1042) that would require the Secretary of Defense to submit a report on recent space launch failures.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Report on Air Force space launch facilities (sec. 1604)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 313) that would authorize an increase of $7.3 million for operations at Air Force space launch facilities, and that would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct a study of space launch ranges and requirements.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of Defense to use the Defense Science Board in preparing a report on Air Force space launch ranges and requirements.

Subtitle B—Commercial Space Launch Services

Sense of Congress regarding United States-Russian cooperation in commercial space launch services (sec. 1611)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1082) that would express the sense of Congress regarding United States-Russian cooperation in commercial space launch services and the relationship of such cooperation to Russia's commitment to preventing the proliferation of ballistic missile technology.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Although the conferees believe that any possible future consideration to modifying the quantitative limitations on commercial space launch services provided by Russian space launch providers should be conditioned on a continued serious commitment by the Government of the Russian Federation to preventing illegal transfers of ballistic missile technology, the conferees take no position at this time on the question of whether such modifications should be approved.

Sense of Congress regarding United States commercial space launch capacity (sec. 1612)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1074) that would: (1) encourage the expansion of a commercial space launch capacity in the United States, including taking actions to eliminate legal or regulatory barriers to long-term competitiveness in the U.S. commercial space launch industry; and (2) that would call for reexamination of the current U.S. policy of permitting the export of commercial satellites of U.S. origin to the People's Republic of China.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Subtitle C—Commission To Assess United States National Security Space Management and Organization

Commission to assess United States national security space management and organization (sec. 1621–1630)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 911–919) that would establish a Commission to Assess United States National Security Space Management and Organization. The commission would conduct a six month review of the following:

(1) the relationship between the intelligence and non-intelligence aspects of national security space (so-called "white space" and "black space"), and the potential benefits of a partial or complete merger of the two aspects;

(2) the benefits of establishing any of the following new organizations: (a) an independent military department and service dedicated to the national security space mission; (b) a corps within the United States Air Force dedicated to the national security space mission; (c) an Assistant Secretary of Defense for space within the Office of the Secretary of Defense; and (d) any other change to the existing organizational structure for managing national security space management and organization; and

The House recedes with an amendment that would: (1) alter the composition of the commission; (2) require the commission to consider a number of matters specified in section 907 of the House amendment, in addition to those specified in the original Senate bill; (3) require the Secretary of Defense to submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives an assessment of the commission's report; and (4) make other technical and clarifying changes.

TITLE XVII—TROOPS-TO-TEACHER PROGRAM

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Troops-to-Teachers program (sec. 1701–1709)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 579) that would amend section 1151 of title 10, United States Code, to improve the current Troops-to-Teachers program and to provide for the transfer of this program to the Department of Education. The recommended provision would change the eligible population from military personnel separated from the services to those who will retire on or after October 1, 1999. Participating members would be required to obtain certification or licensure as an elementary or secondary school teacher, or vocational or technical teacher, and to accept an offer of full-time employment as an elementary or secondary school teacher, or vocational or technical teacher. The provision would authorize either a $5,000 stipend to be paid to each participant or a $10,000 bonus to be paid to those who agree to accept full-time employment as an elementary or secondary school teacher, or vocational or technical teacher for not less than four years in a high need school. In an effort to ensure continued readiness of the Marine Corps, the need for strategic placement of prepositioning facilities, and the desire to obtain the most cost-effective solution to prepositioning operations, the conferees expect the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with those actions necessary to bring this acquisition to completion at the earliest possible time.

The conferees are aware a Supplemental Environmental Impact Statement by the Secretary of the Air Force. The conferees note that the supplemental environmental assessments follow a previously completed Environmental Impact Statement, which culminated in a Record of Decision in October 1994. The conferees encourage the Secretary to proceed expeditiously to complete the Supplemental Environmental Impact Statement so that effective economic reuse may begin at that installation. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Air Force to report every 60 days to the congressional defense committees on progress toward the completion of the Supplemental Environmental Impact Statement.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Armed Forces Institute of Pathology Facility, Walter Reed Army Medical Center, Washington, D.C.

The conferees are concerned that two recent studies have identified extensive life safety, occupational health and operational deficiencies in the facilities supporting the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology (AFIP), principally Building 54 located at the Walter Reed Army Medical Center, Washington, D.C. The identified deficiencies include an inadequate fire alarm system, unreliable emergency power, non-compliant fire separation, insufficient space, failing utilities, and a failure to provide controlled environmental conditions. The conferees are concerned that these conditions are negatively affecting AFIP's mission and may compromise the health and welfare of its employees.

The conferees understand that a military construction project to replace and renovate Building 54 was initially programmed by the Department of the Army at a cost of $185.0 million. The facility was designated for an available site as part of the current Walter Reed master plan. The project was deferred by direction of the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

As an alternative to the military construction project, the American Registry of Pathology has proposed financing, building, and operating a new laboratory for the AFIP. The ARP's proposal would gift the structure to the government following an anticipated 30 year lease. This lease would cost as much as $600.0 million.

The conferees believe that current conditions of AFIP facilities warrant timely corrective action. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to evaluate alternatives for improving the AFIP facilities and report all conclusions and recommendations coincident with the submission of the budget request for military construction for fiscal year 2000.

The House recedes.

Development of Ford Island, Hawaii (sec. 2802)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 2862) that would authorize a series of special authorities for the development of Ford Island, Hawaii, by the Secretary of the Navy. The authorities would authorize the Secretary to convey or lease excess real or personal property in the State of Hawaii for the purpose of facilitating such development and would authorize the Secretary to accept a lease of any facility constructed under this authority in lieu of cash payment for the sale or lease of real property under this authority. In general, no lease entered into by the Secretary under this section could exceed ten years and, upon the termination of any lease, the Secretary would have the right of first refusal to acquire the property. The provision would require the Secretary to use competitive procedures when exercising any of the authorities provided by this section.

As consideration for the sale or lease of real or personal property, the Secretary may accept cash, real property, personal property, services, or any combination thereof, and in no case shall the amount received be less than the fair market value of the real or personal property conveyed or leased. The provision would establish an account on the books of the Treasury known as the Ford Island Improvement Account to carry out improvements and obtain property support services for property or facilities on Ford Island.

This provision would require the Secretary of the Navy to submit a master plan for the development of Ford Island to the appropriate committees of Congress 30 days prior to exercising any of the authorities provided by this section. The provision would also require the Secretary, 30 days prior to the commencement of any lease, sale, or exchange of real property, to submit to the Congressional defense committees a report detailing the terms and conditions of any transaction. This section would prohibit the Secretary from acquiring, constructing, or improving military family housing or unaccompanied personnel housing under this authority in lieu of the authority provided by subchapter IV, chapter 169 of title 10, United States Code. The povision would authorize the Secretary to transfer funds from the Ford Island Improvement Account to the Department of Defense Family Housing Improvement Fund and the Department of Defense Military Unaccompanied Housing fund for such purposes.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 2802).

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would limit the property the Secretary may lease to any public or private sector entity to parcels not required for current operations. The provision would limit ancillary facilities to those that would not be in direct competition, as determined by the Secretary concerned, with the provision of merchandise or services provided by the Army and Air Force Exchange Services, the Navy Exchange Services Command, the Marine Corps Exchange, the Defense Commissary Agency, or any non-appropriated fund activity of the Department of Defense for the morale, welfare, and recreation of members of the armed forces.

Sense of Congress on using incremental funding to carry out military construction projects (sec. 2807)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 2802) that would amend section 2802 of title 10, United States Code, to prohibit the Secretary of Defense and the secretaries of the military departments from obligating funds for a military construction project if the funds appropriated for such projects are insufficient to provide for the construction of a usable facility. The provision would also express the sense of Congress that the President should submit annual budget requests with funding sufficient to fully fund each military construction project and that the Congress should authorize and appropriate sufficient funds to fully fund each military construction project.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would express the sense of Congress that the President should request in the budget for each fiscal year sufficient funds necessary to construct a complete and usable facility or usable improvements to an existing facility. The amendment would make an exception for large projects that may be phase funded consistent with established practices for such projects.

The Department of Defense has traditionally requested full funding for military construction projects, except in limited cases where large projects cost over $50.0 million and construction is expected to exceed two years. The conferees remain concerned that, contrary to these well established budgetary practices and good business practices, the President requested incremental funding, on an outlay-rate basis, for nearly all military construction and family housing projects in the fiscal year 2000 budget. The conferees note that testimony provided to Congress by senior officials of the Department of Defense and military departments indicated for all but the largest military construction projects, incremental funding would likely be detrimental to completion of these projects in a timely fashion. The conferees are deeply concerned that the incremental funding of military construction projects would be less efficient than full funding, may increase the cost of construction, and may increase the administrative burden in awarding and monitoring construction contracts. The conferees find this unacceptable since it detracts from the value of the military construction program. The conferees urge the President to request full funding in future budget requests for military construction projects.

Subtitle B—Real Property and Facilities Administration

Extension of authority for lease of real property for special operations activities (sec. 2811)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 2811) that would amend section 2680 of title 10, United States Code, to extend until September 30, 2005, the authority provided to the Secretary of Defense to lease real property to support special operations activities.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 2811).

The Senate recedes.

Enhancement of authority relating to utility privatization (sec. 2812)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 2812) that would amend section 2688 of title 10, United States Code, to authorize the secretaries of the military departments to enter into a contract for the receipt of utility services in connection with the conveyance of a utility system for a period not to exceed 50 years. The provision would further amend section 2688 of title 10, United States Code, to permit the secretaries of the military departments, in lieu of carrying out a military construction project to construct, repair, or replace a utility system, to use funds authorized and appropriated for such a project to make a contribution toward the cost of construction, repair, or replacement of the utility system by the entity to which the utility system is being conveyed.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 2812), which would further amend section 2688 of title 10, United States Code, to clarify that the secretaries of the military department may convey associated real property, in addition to easements and rights-of-way, if such property is required to further the privatization of a utility system.

Subtitle C—Defense Base Closure and Realignment

Economic development conveyance of base closure property (sec. 2821)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 2821) that would amend the Defense Base Closure and Realignment Act of 1990 (division D of Public Law 101-510) and the 1988 Base Realignment and Closure Act (division B of Public Law 100-526). The provision would authorize the Secretary of military departments concerned to transfer, without consideration, property on an installation recommended for closure or realignment to the local redevelopment authority (LRA), if the authority's reuse plan provides for the property to be used for job creation and any economic benefits are reinvested in the economic redevelopment of the installation and surrounding community.

The provision would provide the secretaries with the authority to modify existing economic development conveyances (EDCs), provided the modification is necessary to achieve rapid economic revitalization and replacement of lost jobs; does not require the return of payments or in kind consideration; is necessary to generate additional employment opportunities; and is subject to the same requirements as those granted under this new authority. The provision would be applicable to conveyances concluded or after April 21, 1999.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would limit the authority of the secretary concerned to modify conveyances under this authority so that the consideration generated from the modified agreement, combined with the proceeds from the disposal of other assets at the installation, are sufficient to reimburse the reserve account for depreciated value of the Non-Appropriated Fund investment in morale, welfare, and recreation and commissary assets with the conveyed parcel of real property. The amendment would also reduce the period in which reinvestment must be made in improvements from ten to seven years. The amendment would also make certain technical and conforming changes.

The conferees reiterate the conveyance of surplus property under this provision is to support permanent job creation. The secretaries of the military departments are strongly encouraged to continue existing policy that while a property transfer for housing in and of itself would not qualify as an economic development conveyance, its inclusion with other properties that are used for permanent job creation (for example, revenue generation to offset a community's redevelopment cost burden) is acceptable. The secretaries of the military departments are further strongly encouraged to prevent "windfall profits" from property conveyances under this provision, by assuring that proceeds from use of the property are used only for purposes legitimately related to permanent job creation on or related to the closing or realigning installation. Otherwise, the secretaries of the military departments should consider sharing in proceeds that are greater than those required to redevelop the base. Finally, it is the intention of the conferees that this expanded authority will not adversely affect current law that already authorizes no-cost property conveyances to rural communities. The secretaries of the military departments are strongly encouraged to ensure that conveyances under this authority do not additionally burden rural recipients of property.

The conferees urge the Secretary of Defense to establish a policy that the service secretaries use all cash proceeds from any disposal of base closure assets at a particular installation to first fund the reserve account established by section 204 of the Defense Authorization and Base Closure and Realignment Act (Public Law 100-526). The amount of funding should equal the depreciated value of the investment made with commissary store funds or non-appropriated funds in facilities on that installation. The service secretaries should fund the reserve account even if the relevant facilities were disposed of in a way that did not generate cash proceeds.

The conferees emphasize that conveyances under this authority do not supplant the transfer authorities delegated to the Department of Defense by the General Services Administration for public benefit purposes, including ports and aviation facilities. The conferees direct the secretary of the appropriate military department to notify the congressional defense committees in each instance in which an economic development conveyance is granted and include a report on the terms and conditions of the conveyance.

Continuation of authority to use Department of Defense Base Closure Account 1990 for activities required to close or realign military installations (sec. 2822)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 322) that would amend section 2703 of title 10, United States Code, to establish an environmental restoration account for Formerly Used Defense Sites and for bases closed or realigned under the Defense Base Closure and Realignment Act of 1990 (division B of Public Law 101-510), as amended, and title II of the Defense Authorization Amendments and Base Closure and Realignment Act (Public Law 100-526), as amended.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 2821) that would amend section 2906 of the Defense Base Closure and Realignment Act of 1990, as amended, to extend the Treasury account known as the "Department of Defense Base Closure Account 1990." The account would be the sole source of funds to carry out environmental restoration activities after the termination of the Secretary of Defense authority to close and realign military installations.

In carrying out the study, the Commission would:

(1) determine whether existing military museums, sites, or memorials adequately provide, in a cost-effective manner, for the display of and interaction with artifacts and representation of the armed forces and of the wars in which the United States has fought; honor the service of the armed forces to the United States; educate current and future generations regarding the armed forces and the sacrifices of the armed forces and the Nation in furtherance of the defense of freedom; and foster public pride in the achievements and activities of the armed forces;

(2) determine whether adequate inventories of artifacts and representation of the armed forces and the wars in which the United States has been engaged would be available from current inventories, or in private or public collections that could be lent to the museums; and

(3) develop preliminary concepts for a basic design, location within the National Capital Area, and an estimate of design, construction, and operating costs of a National Military Museum.

The provision would authorize the Secretary of Defense to provide up to $2.0 million to support the work of the Commission. The provision would also preclude any land transfers or alternative future uses for the Navy Annex property for 24 months after receipt of the study on the expansion of Arlington Cemetery required by the Joint Exploratory Statement of the statement of managers accompanying the Strom Thurmond National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1999 (Public Law 105-261).

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The amendment would further specify ex officio members of the Commission would have no vote on the Commission, and such members would include the Secretary of Transportation. The amendment would also specify that the Commission would be authorized to consider the Navy Annex property, Arlington, Virginia, as a possible site for the National Military Museum, provided the land requirement is between six and ten acres, as part of the requirement to recommend no fewer than three sites within the National Capital Region as a location for the National Military museum. The amendment would also strike the two-year moratorium on the conveyance or alternative uses of the Navy Annex.

TITLE XXX—MILITARY LAND WITHDRAWALS

The Senate bill contained several provisions (secs. 2901-2903) that would express a sense of the Senate regarding the renewal of the Military Lands Withdrawal Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-606) to govern the withdrawal of approximately 7.2 million acres of public domain land as ranges for military training and testing: Naval Air Station Fallon Ranges, Nevada; Nellis Air Force Range, Nevada; Fort Greely Maneuver Area and Air Drop Zone, Alaska; Fort Wainwright Maneuver Area, Alaska; McGregor Range, New Mexico; and Barry M. Goldwater Range, Arizona. Unless renewed, the current authorization for withdrawal would expire in November 2001.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would renew the withdrawal of public lands for military purposes at the ranges and installations governed by the Military Lands Withdrawal Act of 1986. As proposed by the administration, the title provides for a 25-year duration of withdrawal under terms and conditions generally contained in Public Law 99-606, with the exception of the withdrawals at the Naval Air Station Fallon Ranges, Nevada, and the Nellis Air Force Range, Nevada, which would have a 20-year duration. The conferees intend that any application for extension of withdrawal under this title be subject to the Engle Act (43 U.S.C. 157) and Sikes Act (16 U.S.C. 670 et seq.), as provided for under sections 3016 and 3031, and comply with other applicable laws, to include the National Environmental Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.).

Under this title, the status of certain lands would be subject to the following changes: (1) the Cabeza Prieta National Wildlife Refuge would be excluded from the Goldwater Range withdrawal, but military aviation training over the Refuge would continue, and would not be subject to compatibility determinations, consistent with the National Wildlife Refuge System Improvement Act of 1997 (Public Law 105-57) and the Arizona Desert Wilderness Act of 1990 (Public Law 101-628); (2) access to the Cabeza Prieta Wilderness would be allowed for upgrade, replacement, or installation of ground instrumentation; (3) the Secretary of the Air Force would assume primary jurisdiction for target areas located on the Desert National Wildlife Refuge at Nellis Range, Nevada, and the Secretary of the Interior would retain secondary jurisdiction over the lands for wildlife conservation purposes; and (4) multiple withdrawals would be consolidated and the Range Safety and Training area would be withdrawn at the Naval Air Station Fallon, Nevada.

Short title (sec. 3001)

The provision would codify the short title of the Military Lands Withdrawal Act of 1999.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—Withdrawals Generally

Withdrawals (sec. 3011)

The provision would provide for the withdrawal of the following ranges: Naval Air Station Fallon Ranges, Nevada; Nellis Air Force Range, Nevada; Fort Greely Maneuver Area and Air Drop Zone, Alaska; Fort Wainwright Maneuver Area, Alaska; and McGregor Range, New Mexico. These ranges would continue to be subject to the management scheme that is currently in place at these ranges, subject to applicable land management and environmental laws.

Maps and legal descriptions (sec. 3012)

This provision would direct the Secretary of the Interior to publish in the Federal Register and file the legal descriptions of the lands withdrawn under section 3011 of this subtitle.

Termination of withdrawals in Military Lands Withdrawal Act of 1986 (sec. 3013)

This provision would provide that the withdrawal under the Military Lands Withdrawal Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-606) would terminate after November 6, 2001, except as otherwise provided in this title.

Management of lands (sec. 3014)

This provision would provide for the management of lands withdrawn under section 3011 of this subtitle. Under this management scheme, the Secretary of the Interior would manage the following lands in coordination with the secretary of the appropriate military department: Naval Air Station Fallon Ranges, Nevada; Nellis Air Force Range, Nevada; the Desert National Wildlife Refuge, Nevada; Fort Greely Maneuver Area and Air Drop Zone, Alaska; Fort Wainwright Maneuver Area, Alaska; and McGregor Range, New Mexico. Land management plans would be prepared consistent with applicable laws. All nonmilitary use of these withdrawn lands would be subject to such conditions and restrictions as may be necessary to permit military use of such lands.

Duration of withdrawal and reservation (sec. 3015)

This provision would establish a 25-year duration of withdrawal, beginning after the termination of Public Law 99-606 on November 6, 2001, except for the land withdrawals provided for under subsections (a) and (b) of section 3011, which would have a 20-year duration of withdrawal. As for the lands withdrawn for military purposes under section 3011 of this subtitle, but not withdrawn for military purposes by section (1) of the Military Lands Withdrawal Act 1986 (Public Law 99-606), the withdrawal of such lands shall become effective on the date of the enactment of this Act.

Extension of initial withdrawal and reservation (sec. 3016)

The provision would require the secretary of the appropriate military department, not later than three years prior to termination of the withdrawal under this subtitle, to notify Congress and the Secretary of the Interior of the continuing military need for the withdrawn lands. The provision would provide for the procedures associated with extension or relinquishment of withdrawn lands.

Ongoing decontamination (sec. 3017)

This provision would require the secretaries of the military departments to maintain decontamination program, consistent with applicable federal and state laws, of the Naval Air Station Fallon Ranges, Nevada; Nellis Air Force Range, Nevada; Fort Greely Maneuver Area and Air Drop Zone, Alaska; Fort Wainwright Maneuver Area, Alaska; and McGregor Range, New Mexico. The decontamination requirement would apply to these withdrawn lands throughout the duration of the withdrawal and the secretaries of the military departments would be required to annually report on the status of such activities. Prior to transmitting a notice of intent to relinquish lands, the secretary of the military department concerned would be required to prepare a written determination of the extent of contamination.

Delegation (sec. 3018)

This provision would allow for delegation of the functions of the Secretary of Defense, the secretaries of the military departments, and certain functions of the Secretary of the Interior, as described under this subtitle.

Water rights (sec. 3019)

This provision would specify that this subtitle shall not be construed to establish a reservation of water rights or authorize the appropriation of water for the United States with respect to any of the lands withdrawn under section 3011 of this subtitle. Nor would this subtitle affect water rights acquired by the United States before the date of the enactment of this Act.

Hunting, fishing, and trapping (sec. 3020)

This provision would direct that hunting, fishing, and trapping on withdrawn lands subject to this subtitle be conducted in accordance with section 2671 of title 10, United States Code, except that such activities within the Desert National Wildlife Refuge would be subject to the National Wildlife Refuge System Administration Act of 1966 (16 U.S.C. 668dd et seq.), and other laws applicable to the National Wildlife Refuge System.

Mining and mineral leasing (sec. 3021)

This provision would require the Secretary of Interior, with the concurrence of the secretary of the military department concerned, to determine which lands withdrawn by section 3011 of this subtitle would be suitable for opening to the operation of the Mining Law of 1872, and other laws applicable to mining activities on public lands.

Use of mineral materials (sec. 3022)

This provision would authorize the secretary of the military department concerned to use certain sand, gravel, or similar mineral material resources from lands withdrawn by this subtitle.

Immunity of United States (sec. 3023)

This provision would hold the United States harmless and not subject to liability for any injuries or damages to persons or property suffered in the course of any mining, mineral, or geothermal leasing activity conducted on the lands covered by section 3011 of this subtitle.

Subtitle B—Withdrawals in Arizona

Barry M. Goldwater Range, Arizona (sec. 3031)

The provision would withdraw the Barry M. Goldwater Range and provide for the transfer of land management authority from the Director, Bureau of Land Management (BLM) to the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Air Force, as appropriate. The management of the Goldwater Range would be split between two military departments: the Navy would manage the West Range; and the Air Force would manage the East Range. The statutory changes to the management structure reflect the unique land management challenges and needs associated with the Goldwater Range. The duration of withdrawal would be 25 years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

The baseline for the exercise of land management authority by the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Air Force would be an integrated natural resource management plan prepared jointly by the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Air Force, and the Secretary of Interior. Any disagreements regarding the contents or implementation of the plan would be subject to resolution by the Secretary of the Navy for the West Range and the Secretary of the Air Force for the East Range, after consultation with the Secretary of Interior. As part of this new management scheme, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Air Force, and the Secretary of Interior would be required to jointly prepare a report every five years that describes the changes in the condition of the lands, the current military uses, and the changes in military use. The five-year reports could be combined with the annual reports currently required by the Sikes Act (Public Law 105-85). Disagreements concerning the contents of a report would be resolved by the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Air Force. The five-year report would then be subject to public review and comment prior to finalization. The land management authority of the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Air Force, as the case may be, could revert back to the Secretary of Interior, if the Secretary of Interior determines that there is continuing significant and verifiable degradation of natural and cultural resources, no sooner than 90 days after the Secretary of Interior submits notice and a report to Congress.

The conferees intend that the five-year report on the Goldwater Range will not resemble or duplicate any report required under the National Environmental Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 7609 et seq.), or any other land management or environmental statute, with the exception of the Sikes Act. The new reporting requirement established for the Goldwater Range should be considered a public comment document that resembles the existing Sikes Act reporting requirement. The purpose of the report is to determine the status of land management at the Goldwater Range, and to make that information available to the public for review and comment.

Military use of Cabeza Prieta National Wildlife Refuge and Cabeza Prieta Wilderness (sec. 3032)

Under this provision, the Cabeza Prieta National Wildlife Refuge and the Cabeza Prieta Wilderness would be managed by the Secretary of Interior, in coordination with the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Air Force. The provision would require the Secretary of Interior to manage the refuge and the wilderness consistent with the purposes for which the refuge and wilderness were established and to support current and future military aviation training needs, as provided by memorandum. The withdrawal of the Cabeza Prieta National Wildlife Refuge, as provided for under the Military Lands Withdrawal Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-606), would terminate on the date of the enactment of this Act.

Maps and legal descriptions (sec. 3033)

This provision would direct the Secretary of Interior to publish in the Federal Register and file the legal descriptions of the lands withdrawn under section 3031 of this subtitle.

Water rights (sec. 3034)

This provision would specify that this subtitle shall not be construed to establish a reservation of water rights or authorize the appropriation of water for the United States with respect to any of the lands withdrawn under this subtitle. Nor would this title affect water rights acquired by the United States before the date of the enactment of this Act.

Hunting, fishing, and trapping (sec. 3035)

This provision would direct that hunting, fishing, and trapping on withdrawn lands subject to this subtitle be conducted in accordance with section 2671 of title 10, United States Code, except that such activities within the Cabeza Prieta National Wildlife Refuge would be subject to the National Wildlife Refuge System Administration Act of 1966 (16 U.S.C. 668dd et seq.), and other laws applicable to the National Wildlife Refuge System.

Use of mineral materials (sec. 3036)

This provision would authorize the secretary of the military department concerned to use certain sand, gravel, or similar mineral material resources from lands withdrawn by this subtitle.

Immunity of United States (sec. 3037)

This provision would hold the United States harmless and not subject to liability for any injuries or damages to persons or property suffered in the course of any mining, mineral, or geothermal leasing activity conducted on the lands covered by section 3031 of this subtitle.

Subtitle C—Authorization of Appropriations

Authorization of appropriations (sec. 3041)

This provision would authorize to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this title.

DIVISION C—DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY NATIONAL SECURITY AUTHORIZATIONS AND OTHER AUTHORIZATIONS

TITLE XXXI—DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY NATIONAL SECURITY PROGRAMS

Overview

Title XXXI authorizes appropriations for the atomic energy defense activities of the Department of Energy for fiscal year 2000, including: the purchase, construction, and acquisition of plant and capital equipment; research and development; nuclear weapons; naval nuclear propulsion; environmental restoration and waste management; operating expenses; and other expenses necessary to carry out the purposes of the Department of Energy Organization Act (Public Law 95-91). The title would authorize appropriations in five categories: weapons activities; defense environmental restoration and waste management; other defense activities; defense environmental management privatization; and defense nuclear waste disposal.

The budget request for the atomic energy defense activities totaled $12.4 billion, a 2.8 percent increase over the adjusted fiscal year 1999 level. Of the total amount requested, $4.5 billion was for weapons activities, $4.5 billion was for defense environmental restoration and waste management activities, $1.0 billion was for defense facility closure projects, $228.0 million was for defense environmental management privatization, $1.8 billion was for other defense activities, $112.0 million was for defense nuclear waste disposal, and $150.0 million was for the formerly utilized sites remedial action program.

The conferees recommend $12.1 billion for atomic energy defense activities, a decrease of $250.0 million to the budget request. The conferees recommend the following: $4.5 billion for weapons activities, a decrease of $41.0 million; $5.5 billion for defense environmental restoration and waste management (including defense facility closure projects), a decrease of $73.0 million; $228.0 million for defense environmental management privatization, the amount of the budget request; $1.8 billion for other defense activities, an increase of $13.9 million; and $112.0 million for defense nuclear waste disposal, the amount of the request. The conferees recommend no funding for the formerly utilized sites remedial action program, representing a decrease of $150.0 million.

The following table summarizes the budget request and the committee recommendations:

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Long-term stewardship plan

The conferees direct the Secretary of Energy to provide to the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, not later than October 1, 2000, a report on existing and anticipated long-term environmental stewardship responsibilities for those Department of Energy (DOE) sites or portions of sites for which environmental restoration, waste disposal, and facility stabilization is expected to be completed by the end of calender year 2006. The report shall include a description of what sites, whole and geographically distinct locations, as well as specific disposal cells, contained contamination areas, and entombed contaminated facilities that cannot or are not anticipated to be cleaned up to standards allowing for unrestricted use. The report shall also identify the long-term stewardship responsibilities (for example, longer than 30 years) that would be required at each site, including soil and groundwater monitoring, record keeping, and containment structure maintenance. In those cases where the Department has a reasonably reliable estimate of annual or long-term costs for stewardship activities, such costs shall be provided. The Secretary shall attempt to provide sufficient information to ensure confidence in the Department's commitment to carrying out these long-term stewardship responsibilities and to undertake the necessary management responsibilities, including cost, scope, and schedule.

The conferees recognize that in many cases residual contamination will be left after cleanup or will be contained through disposal, and that such residual contamination and wastes will require long-term stewardship to ensure that human health and the environment are protected.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Subtitle A—National Security Programs Authorizations

Weapons activities (sec. 3101)

The budget request included $4.5 billion for atomic energy defense weapons activities of the Department of Energy (DOE).

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3101) that would authorize $4.5 billion for weapons activities, a decrease of $1.0 million.

The House amendment included a similar provision (sec. 3101) that would authorize $4.5 billion for weapons activities, an increase of $8.5 million.

The Senate recedes in part and the House recedes in part.

The conferees agree to authorize $4.5 billion, a decrease of $41.0 million from the requested amount. The amount authorized is for the following activities: $2.3 billion for stockpile stewardship, a decrease of $33.9 million; $2.0 billion for stockpile management, an increase of $25.0 million; and $241.5 million for program direction, a decrease of $5.0 million. The conferees agree to decreases of $27.1 million as follows: $6.1 million for contractor travel savings; $14.0 million from uncosted prior year funds; and $7.0 million from stockpile stewardship and stockpile management construction projects.

Accelerated Strategic Computing Initiative and Stockpile Computing program

Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for stockpile stewardship, the conferees recommend $517.5 million for the Accelerated Strategic Computing Initiative (ASCI) and Stockpile Computing programs, a decrease of $25.0 million.

The conferees are disappointed that the Department of Energy failed to follow congressional guidance included in the statement of managers accompanying the Strom Thurmond National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1999 (Public Law 105–261) to slow the rate of acquisition in the ASCI and Stockpile Computing programs. The conferees continue to support the ASCI and Stockpile Computing programs, but believe that the Department has not fully justified the rate of growth in this program in light of other programmatic requirements of the Office of Defense Programs. The conferees note that even at this reduced level of funding, the ASCI and Stockpile Computing programs will experience significant growth in funding levels over fiscal year 1998 and 1999 funding levels.

The conferees support the Secretary of Energy's continued utilization of the capabilities and facilities of the Pittsburgh supercomputing Center to better meet the Department's supercomputing needs in lieu of planned acquisitions proposed within the ASCI program.

Inertial Confinement Fusion

Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for stockpile stewardship, the conferees recommend $227.6 million for the inertial confinement fusion (ICF) program, an increase of $10.0 million. Of the amounts authorized for ICF, $30.5 million shall be available for the University of Rochester's Laboratory for Laser Energetics.

Technology partnerships and education

Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for stockpile stewardship, the conferees recommend $14.5 million for the technology partnerships subaccount, a decrease of $7.7 million, and $18.6 million for the education subaccount, a decrease of $11.2 million. Of the amounts available in the technology partnerships and education, the conferees recommend $5.0 million for the American Textiles Partnership project. The conferees understand that DOE funding for this partnership will end in fiscal year 2000. The conferees recommend no funds to relocate, or prepare for relocation, the U.S. Atomic Museum in Albuquerque, New Mexico. The conferees believe that the local community derives the principal economic benefit from the commercial activities at the museum and should, therefore, bear the major share of any new construction costs. The conferees recommend the requested amount of $6.0 million be made available for the Northern New Mexico Educational Enrichment Foundation. The conferees recommend the requested amount of $8.0 million be made available for education support to the Los Alamos school district, the requested amount.

The conferees believe that the Amarillo Plutonium Research Center is more appropriately funded by the Office of Fissile Materials Control and Disposition and, accordingly, recommends no stockpile stewardship funds for this activity.

Stockpile management programs

The conferees recommend an increase of $25.0 million for weapons production plants, to be allocated as follows: $15.0 million for the Kansas City Plant to support advanced manufacturing efforts such as the Advanced Manufacturing, Design and Production Technologies program, infrastructure improvements, and skills retention; and $10.0 million for the Pantex Plant to support scheduled workload requirements associated with weapons dismantlement activities, infrastructure improvements, and skills retention.

The conferees believe that the following activities are more appropriately funded through the Office of Fissile Materials Control and Disposition and that they be transferred from the Office of Defense Programs to the Office of Fissile Materials Disposition: storage of special nuclear materials that have been designated surplus to U.S. military needs; the Parallax mixed oxide fuel project at Los Alamos National Laboratory; and plutonium pit disassembly and conversion activities. The conferees believe that these activities are more consistent with the missions and functions of the Office of Fissile Materials Control and Disposition and direct the Director of that office to assume responsibility for these programs not later than fiscal year 2001. The conferees expect that future years funding requirements for these activities will be reflected in the budget request for the Office of Fissile Materials Control and Disposition.

Tritium production

The conferees recommend $170.0 million for the tritium production program. This amount includes full funding for the Secretary's preferred tritium production option, the procurement of irradiation services from an existing Tennessee Valley Authority light water reactor under the Economy Act of 1932 (42 U.S.C. 1535). The conferees are, however, concerned that the budget request may be insufficient to complete design of critical elements of the Department's selected backup technology, the accelerator production of tritium (APT). The conferees note that a separate provision in this Act requires the Secretary to provide sufficient funds to complete engineering development and demonstration, preliminary design, and detailed design of key elements of the APT system and to complete engineering development and preliminary design of the APT technology as a backup source of tritium consistent with the Secretary's December 22, 1998, decision. The conferees encourage the Secretary to utilize those stockpile management funds necessary to complete design of these critical elements of the APT system.

Program direction

The conferees recommend a $5.0 million decrease to the budget request for program direction.

The conferees strongly encourage the Secretary to utilize the authority to make voluntary separation incentive payments authorized elsewhere by this Act. The conferees are disappointed that the Department has failed to implement fully the realignment recommendations described in the 1997 report of the Institute for Defense Analysis on the management structure for weapons activities of the Department. The statement of managers accompanying the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1998 (Public Law 105–85) directed the Department to begin implementation of these recommendations as soon as practicable. The conferees believe that the proposed decrease to the program direction account can be achieved through savings and efficiency gains resulting from reorganization and program realignment efforts. The conferees believe that the performance of the Office of Defense Programs will be improved by eliminating duplicative efforts and by streamlining management control of DOE weapons activities.

Defense Programs Campaigns

The conferees fully support the "Defense Programs Campaigns" concept proposed by the Assistant Secretary of Energy for Defense Programs. This concept will greatly assist Congress in assessing the degree of integration among varied experiments, simulation, research, and weapons assessments activities carried out at the DOE weapons laboratories and production plants. The conferees direct that future budget weapons activities submittal reflect the campaign concept.

Defense environmental restoration and waste management (sec. 3102)

The budget request included $4.5 billion for defense environmental management activities and $1.0 billion for defense facility closure projects of the Department of Energy (DOE).

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3102) that would authorize $5.5 billion for defense environmental management activities, including closure projects, a reduction of $36.0 million.

The House amendment included a similar provision (sec. 3102) that would authorize $5.7 billion for environmental management activities, including closure projects, an increase of $81.0 million.

The Senate recedes in part and the House recedes in part. The conferees recommend an authorization of $5.5 billion for defense environmental management activities, including closure projects, a reduction of $73.0 million. The amount authorized is for the following activities: $1.1 billion for closure projects, an increase of $15.0 million; $980.9 million for site and project completion, the amount of the request; $2.9 billion for post 2006 completion, a decrease of $33.6 million; the requested amount of $230.5 million for technology development; and $339.4 million for program direction, a decrease of $10.0 million. The conferees agreed to decreases of $44.4 million as follows: $2.4 million to account for reduced travel expenditures and $42.0 to account for increased contractor efficiencies to be gained through contract management reforms.

Defense facility closure projects

Of the amounts authorized for defense facility closure projects, the conferees recommend an increase of $15.0 million for the Rocky Flats Environmental Technology Site to ensure that the closure deadline of 2000 is met.

Post 2006 completion

Of the amounts authorized for post 2006 completion, the conferees recommend an increase of $15.0 million to address planning, demonstration and other requirements associated with modification of the Savannah River in-tank precipitation process; an increase of $10.0 million to address Hanford cleanup commitments, including the 324-B Cell project, the Columbia River Corridor Initiative, reactor decontamination and decommissioning, and Plutonium Finishing Plant stabilization activities; an increase of $5.0 million for operations and maintenance activities at the Hanford Tank Waste Remediation System project; an increase of $5.0 million for the National Spent Fuel Program; a reduction of $20.0 million for environment, safety and health studies related to off-site releases of contamination; a reduction of $40.3 million to the Pit 9 project to account for uncosted, available funds; and a total reduction of $8.3 million to construction projects 88–R–830 and 94–E–602. The conferees recommend full funding for the F-canyon and H-canyon materials processing facilities.

Technology development

Of the amounts authorized for the Office of Science and Technology, the conferees recommend an increase of $5.0 million for applied research and development activities to be offset by a reduction to data base development and information management activities, the risk policy program, and the environmental management science program.

The conferees support the integration of industrial programs and university based programs into the Environmental Management technology focus areas. The conferees encourage the Office of Science and Technology to continue its inclusion of industry, universities, and non-profit organizations in technology development and deployment activities.

Program direction

The conferees recommend a reduction of $10.0 million to program direction.

Columbia River Corridor Initiative

The conferees support the Columbia River Corridor Initiative to accelerate cleanup along the Hanford Reach of the Columbia River. The conferees direct the Assistant Secretary of Energy for Environmental Management to establish a schedule by which the 100 square miles of the Hanford site that adjoin the Columbia River could be cleaned up on an accelerated schedule and proposed for delisting from the National Priorities List of the Environmental Protection Agency.

Other defense activities (sec. 3103)

The budget request included $1.8 billion for other defense activities of the Department of Energy (DOE).

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3103) that would authorize $1.8 billion for other defense activities, an increase of $29.0 million to the budget request.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 3103) that would authorize $1.8 billion other defense activities, a decrease of $12.9 million to the budget request.

The Senate recedes in part and the House recedes in part.

The conferees agree to authorize $1.8 billion, an increase of $13.9 million. The conferees agreed to a decrease of $10.0 million as follows: $2.0 million to account for reduced travel expenditures and $8.0 from uncosted prior year funds. The conferees did not include the Department's proposed offset of $12.6 million to fund counterintelligence programs.

Nonproliferation and national security

The conferees recommend $732.1 million for nonproliferation and national security.

Arms control

The conferees recommend $276.0 million for arms control, a reduction of $20.0 million. The conferees direct that this reduction be taken in the Initiatives for Proliferation Prevention program and the Nuclear Cities Initiative. The conferees recommend $145.0 million for the international materials protection, control, and accounting program, the requested amount.

Security clearances

The conferees recommend $44.1 million for security clearances, an increase of $14.1 million. The additional funds would be used to decrease the backlog of background investigations and to elevate certain DOE and contractor employees' clearances, as would be required by a separate provision in this Act.

International nuclear safety

The conferees recommend $24.7 million for international nuclear safety, a reduction of $9.3 million.

Fissile materials control and disposition

The conferees recommend $200.0 million for fissile materials control and disposition, the requested amount.

The conferees believe that many activities currently carried out by the Office of Defense Programs would be more appropriately carried out by the Office of Fissile Materials Control and Disposition. The conferees direct that the Office of Fissile Materials Control and Disposition assume responsibility for the following activities currently funded within the weapons activities account: storage of special nuclear materials that have been designated surplus to U.S. military needs; the Parallax mixed oxide fuel project at Los Alamos National Laboratory; the Amarillo Plutonium Research Center; and surplus plutonium pit disassembly and conversion activities. The conferees believe that this action will more accurately reflect the missions and functions of the Office of Fissile Materials Control and Disposition. The conferees expect that future year funding requirements for these activities will be reflected in the materials disposition program budget account.

The conferees believe that the Amarillo Plutonium Research Center is more appropriately funded by the Office of Fissile Materials Control and Disposition and, accordingly, recommend $5.0 million for this activity.

The conferees are pleased to note the continuing progress of the gas reactor development program and hope that this might provide additional plutonium burning capacity in Russia.

Worker and community transition

The conferees recommend the requested amount of $30.0 million for worker and community transition.

Environment, safety and health-defense

The conferees recommend $98.0 million for environment, safety and health-defense, an increase of $6.0 million.

Counterintelligence

The conferees recommend $39.2 million for the Office of Counterintelligence, an increase of $8.0 million. The conferees recommend that the additional funds be utilized to implement an enhanced computer security program at DOE facilities, including cyber security measures such as intrusion detection, early warning, reporting, and analysis capabilities. The conferees direct that priority being given to implementing such added computer security at the three weapons laboratories.

Intelligence

The conferees recommend the requested amount of $36.0 million for the Office of Intelligence.

Naval Reactors

The conferees recommend $677.6 million for naval reactors, an increase of $12.6 million. The conferees expect these funds to be utilized to expedite decommissioning and decontamination activities at surplus training facilities.

Defense nuclear waste disposal (sec. 3104)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3105) that would authorize $112.0 million for the Department of Energy (DOE) fiscal year 2000 defense contribution to the Defense Nuclear Waste Fund. The authorized amount would be offset by $39.0 million to account for transfer of funds to the Nuclear Waste Disposal Fund.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 3104) that would authorize $73.0 million for the DOE fiscal year 2000 defense contribution to the Defense Nuclear Waste Fund.

The House recedes.

Defense environmental management privatization (sec. 3105)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3105) that would authorize $241.0 million for defense environmental management privatization projects an increase of $13.0 million, to be allocated as follows: $106.0 million for the Tank Waste Remediation System project, phase I (Richland); $110.0 million for the Advanced Mixed Waste Treatment project (Idaho); $5.0 million for spent nuclear fuel dry storage (Idaho); and $20.0 million for environmental management/waste management disposal (Oak Ridge). The provision declined to recommend privatization funds for the Oak Ridge Transuranic Waste Treatment project, which was moved to the Site and Project Completion account. The provision further authorized the use of $25.0 million in fiscal year 1998 unobligated, uncosted balances within the Defense Environmental Management Privatization account to reflect the cancellation of the spent nuclear fuel transfer and storage project (Savannah River).

The House amendment included a similar provision (sec. 3105) that would authorize $253.0 million for defense environmental management privatization projects an increase of $25.0 million, including $12.0 million for transuranic waste treatment (Oak Ridge) and the use of $25.0 million in fiscal year 1998 unobligated, uncosted balances to reflect the cancellation of the spent nuclear fuel transfer and storage project (Savannah River).

The Senate recedes.

The conferees declined to accept the request for a multiyear funding authorization for defense environmental management privatization activities. The conferees fully support the Tank Waste Remediation System privatization project at the Hanford site. The conferees believe that the technological approach proposed to address the wastes stored in the Hanford tanks is viable and realistic.

Subtitle B—Recurring General Provisions

Reprogramming (sec. 3121)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3121) that would prohibit the reprogramming of funds in excess of 110 percent of the amount authorized for the program, or in excess of $1.0 million above the amount authorized for the program, until the Secretary of Energy submits a report to the congressional defense committees and a period of 30 days has elapsed after the date on which the report is received.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 3121) that would prohibit the reprogramming of funds until 60 days after the date the Secretary of Energy notifies the congressional defense committees.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would prohibit the reprogramming of funds until 45 days after the date the Secretary of Energy notifies the congressional defense committees.

Limits on general plant projects (sec. 3122)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3122) that would authorize the Secretary of Energy to carry out any construction project authorized under general plant projects if the total estimated cost does not exceed $5.0 million. The provision would require the Secretary to submit a report to the congressional defense committees detailing the reasons for the cost variation if the cost of the project is revised to exceed $5.0 million.

The House amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 3122).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Limits on construction projects (sec. 3123)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3123) that would permit any construction project to be initiated and continued only if the estimated cost for the project does not exceed 125 percent of the higher of the amount authorized for the project or the most recent total estimated cost presented to the Congress as justification for such project. The provision would prohibit the Secretary of Energy from exceeding such limits until 30 legislative days after the Secretary submits to the congressional defense committees a detailed report setting forth the reasons for the increase. This provision would also specify that the 125 percent limitation would not apply to projects estimated to cost under $5.0 million.

The House amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 3123).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Fund transfer authority (sec. 3124)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3124) that would permit funds authorized by this Act to be transferred to other agencies of the government for performance of work for which the funds were authorized and appropriated. The provision would permit the merger of such transferred funds with the authorizations of the agency to which they are transferred. The provision would also limit, to not more than five percent of the account, the amount of funds authorized by this Act that may be transferred between authorization accounts within the Department of Energy.

The House amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 3124).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Authority for conceptual and construction design (sec. 3125)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3125) that would limit the authority of the Secretary of Energy to request construction funding until the Secretary has completed a conceptual design. This limitation would apply to construction projects with a total estimated cost greater than $5.0 million. If the estimated cost to prepare the construction design exceeds $600,000, the provision would require the Secretary to obtain a specific authorization to obligate such funds. If the estimated cost to prepare the conceptual design exceeds $3.0 million, the provision would require the Secretary to request funds for the conceptual design before requesting funds for construction. The provision would further require the Secretary to submit to Congress a report on each conceptual design completed under this provision. The provision would also provide an exception to these requirements in the case of an emergency.

The House amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 3125).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Authority for emergency planning, design, and construction activities (sec. 3126)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3126) that would permit the Secretary of Energy to perform planning and design with any funds available to the Department of Energy pursuant to this title, including those funds authorized for advance planning and construction design, whenever the Secretary determines that the design must proceed expeditiously to protect the public health and safety, to meet the needs of national defense, or to protect property.

The House amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 3126).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Funds available for all national security programs of the Department of Energy (sec. 3127)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3127) that would authorize, subject to section 3121 of this Act, amounts to be appropriated for management and support activities and for general plant projects to be made available for use in connection with all national security programs of the Department of Energy.

The House amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 3127).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Availability of funds (sec. 3128)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3128) that would authorize amounts to be appropriated for operating expenses or for plant and capital equipment for the Department of Energy to remain available until expended. Program direction funds would remain available until the end of fiscal year 2002.

The House amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 3128).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Transfers of defense environmental management funds (sec. 3129)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3129) that would provide the manager of each field office of the Department of Energy with limited authority to transfer up to $5.0 million in fiscal year 2000 defense environmental management funds from one program or project under the jurisdiction of the office to another such program or project, including site project and completion and post 2006 completion funds, once in a fiscal year.

The House amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 3129).

The conference agreement includes this provision.

Subtitle C—Program Authorizations, Restrictions, and Limitations

Prohibition on use of funds for certain activities under Formerly Utilized Site Remedial Action Program (sec. 3131)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3131) that would prohibit the use of funds, authorized to be appropriated by this Act to conduct treatment, storage, or disposal actions at Formerly Utilized Site Remedial Action Program sites in fiscal year 2000 and beyond.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Continuation of processing, treatment, and disposition of legacy nuclear materials (sec. 3132)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3132) that would require the Secretary of Energy to maintain a high state of readiness at the F-canyon and H-canyon facilities at the Savannah River site.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees note that maintaining F-canyon and H-canyon facilities has been recommended by the Defense Nuclear Facilities Safety Board and continues to be consistent with Department of Energy program requirements.

Nuclear weapons stockpile life extension program (sec. 3133)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3133) that would establish the Stockpile Life

Extension Program (SLEP) within the Department of Energy (DOE) Office of Defense Programs. The provision would require the Secretary of Energy to submit a long-range SLEP plan, including, but not limited to: (1) detailed proposals for the remanufacture of each weapon design designated to be included in the enduring stockpile; (2) detailed proposals to expedite the collection of those data necessary to support SLEP, such as materials and component aging, new manufacturing techniques, and materials replacement issues; (3) the role and mission of each DOE nuclear weapons laboratory and production plant, including anticipated workload, modernization, and skills retention requirements; and (4) funding requirements for each program element, identified by weapon type and facility. The provision would require the SLEP plan to be provided to the congressional defense committees not later than January 1, 2000. The provision would also require the Secretary to update the plan each year and submit it to the congressional defense committees at the same time the President submits the annual budget to Congress. The provision would further require the Secretary to request adequate funds to carry out the activities identified in the SLEP plan and in the annual SLEP plan updates.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would also require the long-term plan to include an identification of funds that are needed to carry out the program in the current fiscal year and the subsequent five fiscal years. The House amendment would also require an independent assessment by the Comptroller General of the United States to determine whether the plan is executable in the current and future fiscal years.

Procedures for meeting tritium production requirements (sec. 3134)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3134) that would require the Secretary of Energy to produce new tritium to meet the requirements of the Nuclear Weapons Stockpile Memorandum at the Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA) Watts Bar or Sequoyah nuclear power plants, consistent with the Secretary's December 22, 1998, decision designating the Department of Energy's preferred tritium production technology. The provision would require the Secretary to design and construct a new tritium extraction facility in the H-Area of the Department of Energy Savannah River Site in order to support fully the Secretary's decision. The provision would further require the Secretary to complete engineering development and preliminary design of the Accelerator Production of Tritium (APT) technology as a backup source of tritium to the Department of Energy's preferred technology, consistent with the Secretary's December 22, 1998, decision, and to make available those funds necessary to complete engineering development and demonstration, preliminary design, and detailed design of key elements of the APT system, consistent with the Secretary's decision of December 22, 1998.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 3161) that would require the Secretary of Energy to prepare a plan to expedite design, completion, and construction of the APT. The provision would require the Secretary to designate APT as the primary technology for tritium production and implement the APT plan, if amended licenses for the operation of commercial light water reactors for tritium production have not been completed by December 31, 2002.

The House recedes.

Independent cost estimate of accelerator production of tritium (sec. 3135)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3135) that would require the Secretary of Energy to conduct an independent cost estimate of the Accelerator Production of Tritium (APT) program at the highest possible level given the state of maturity of the program, but not less than a Type III "sampling technique" method as it is currently defined by the Department of Energy. The Secretary would be required to submit to the congressional defense committees a report on the results of the cost estimate not later than April 1, 2000.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary to conduct an independent cost estimate at a level of detail not less than a Type III "parametric estimate" method, with some sampling where practicable.

The conferees note that the APT program has undergone numerous independent cost estimates and reviews in support of the Secretary's tritium selection decision. The conferees further note that the Secretary's December 22, 1998, tritium decision document states, "[N]umerous reviews have provided confidence that there are no technical roadblocks, and that the costs of the project are well understood." The conferees understand that the next independent cost estimate (ICE) review of the preliminary design of the APT is scheduled for 2002. The conferees expect the Department to continue engineering development and preliminary design of key components of the APT technology, as required by the Secretary's December 1998 tritium decision, and to maintain the current schedule for an ICE review in 2002.

Nonproliferation initiatives and activities (sec. 3136)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3136) that would: (1) limit the percentage of appropriated funds that may be spent by the Department of Energy (DOE) laboratories to 40 percent; (2) express a sense of Congress that the President enter into negotiations with the Russian government for the purposes of entering into an agreement between the U.S. and Russia to provide for a permanent exemption from taxation for the Initiatives for Proliferation Prevention Program (IPP); and (3) enhance the management, accountability, and oversight of the IPP and Nuclear Cities Initiative.

The House amendment contained similar provisions (sec. 3131–3132) that would limit the percentage of funds appropriated for the IPP program that are spent at the DOE laboratories to 25 percent and would prohibit funds appropriated for the IPP program from being used to pay Russian government taxes and customs duties.

Both the Senate and the House recede.

The conferees agree to combine all three provisions. The provision would prohibit the payment of Russian taxes but in the event that the payment of Russian taxes is unavoidable, the Secretary of Energy shall: (1) after such payment, submit a report to the congressional defense committees explaining the particular circumstances that would make such payment under the IPP program unavoidable; and (2) ensure that sufficient additional funds are provided to the IPP program to offset the amount of such payment.

The conferees intend that in implementing the requirements of subsection (6), subparagraph (B) of this provision, if funds are reprogrammed to the IPP program to offset the funds used to pay taxes, the Secretary shall use established reprogramming procedures. The conferees note that if the Department of Energy learns that recipients of IPP funds have paid income or other taxes, the conferees expect that the Secretary of Energy will notify the congressional defense committees in accordance with subsection (6), subparagraph (A).

The conferees, troubled by the disproportionally large share of the IPP funds that have remained in the DOE national laboratories, have agreed to a funding restriction that limits the amount of IPP funds spent in the DOE national laboratories to 35 percent of the overall program funding. The DOE had previously committed to achieving a 40 percent limitation. The conferees recognize that meeting the 35 percent in fiscal year 2000 will be a challenge. While clearly the goal of the IPP program is to ensure that the maximum amount of IPP funds reach the program participants, DOE must also ensure that there is adequate program oversight.

Support of theater ballistic missile defense activities of the Department of Defense (sec. 3137)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 3134) that would authorize $30.0 million for the following: stockpile stewardship for theater ballistic missile defense technology development, concept demonstration, and integrated testing to improve reliability and reduce risk in hit-to-kill interceptors for theater ballistic missile defenses; science and engineering teams to address technical problems identified by the director of the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization (BMDO) which are critical to the acquisition of a theater ballistic missile defense capability; and other research, development, and demonstration activities that support the mission of BMDO. The provision would also require that any such activities conform to the memorandum of understanding (MOU) between the Secretaries of Energy and Defense required by section 3131 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1998 (Public Law 105–85) and be funded either through direct contributions or through a waiver of a federal administrative charge, overhead costs, or other indirect costs of the Department of Energy (DOE) or its contractors.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would authorize $25.0 million for stockpile stewardship for theater ballistic missile defense technology development. The amendment would authorize such funds to be made available through direct contributions or through a waiver of a federal administrative charge, overhead costs, or other indirect costs of the DOE. The amendment would further require that any such activities conform to the MOU between the Secretary of Energy and the Secretary of Defense.

Subtitle D—Matters Relating to Safeguards, Security, and Counterintelligence

Short title (sec. 3141)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3151) that would cite the title of subtitle D as "Safeguards, Security, and Counterintelligence at Department of Energy Facilities."

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 3181) that would cite the title of subtitle F as "The National Security Information Protection Improvement Act."

The House recedes.

Commission on Safeguards, Security, and Counterintelligence at Department of Energy Facilities (sec. 3142)

The Senate bill included a provision (sec. 3152) that would repeal sections 3161 and 3162(b) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1998 (Public Law 105-85), to eliminate the requirement for the Department of Energy Security Management Board. The provision would create a permanent, independent safeguards security, and counterintelligence oversight commission to assess the adequacy of safeguards, security, and counterintelligence at Department of Energy (DOE) facilities. The provision would require the commission to assess specifically assess the adequacy of: (1) safeguards, security, and counterintelligence programs, plans, and budgets of each DOE headquarters program element and each DOE field office; (2) capabilities and skills within Headquarters and field organizations; and (3) all relevant DOE guidance, including DOE Orders, Presidential Decision Directives, and the Design Threat Basis document. The provision would require the commission to make recommendations regarding any changes in security or counterintelligence policies and procedures necessary to balance risk and capability in order to deter or react to credible threats.

The provision would require the commission to be composed of nine members serving four-year, staggered terms. The provision would further require that appointments be made not later than 60 days after enactment of the provision, as follows: two by the Chairman of the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate, in consultation with the ranking member of that Committee; one by the ranking member of the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate, in consultation with the Chairman of that Committee; two by the Chairman of the Committee on Armed Services of the House of Representatives, in consultation with the ranking member of that Committee; one by the ranking member of the Committee on Armed Services of the House of Representatives, in consultation with the Chairman of that Committee; one by the Secretary of Defense; one by the Director of Central Intelligence; and one by the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The provision would require that the chairman of the commission be designated from among the members of the commission by the Chairman of the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate, in consultation with the Chairman of the Committee on Armed Services of the House of Representatives. The provision would require that the commission submit to the congressional defense committees, not later than February 15 of each year, an annual activities, findings, and recommendations report. The provision would require that the report include any recommendations for legislation and administrative action.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees recommend that of the funds authorized to be appropriated in fiscal year 2000 by sections 3101 and 3103, not more than $1.0 million be available to the commission.

Background investigations of certain personnel at Department of Energy facilities (sec. 3143)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3153) that would require the conduct of a full background investigation, meeting the requirements of section 145 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 be any Department of Energy (DOE) employee or any DOE contractor employee whose duties or assignments are required to be carried out in physical proximity to locations where restricted data or formerly restricted data may be located or who has regular access to locations where Restricted Data is located. The provision would require the Secretary to meet requirements of this provision one year from the date of enactment of this provision.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would limit such requirements to employees who work at a nuclear weapons laboratory or a nuclear weapons production facility.

The conferees understand that this requirement will result in increased costs to the Department of Energy. In order to address this need, the conferees recommended an increase to the budget request for security investigations, as discussed elsewhere in this Act.

Conduct of security clearances (sec. 3144)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3163) that would require that any background investigation on an individual seeking a security clearance for access to restricted data be conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI). The provision would require the Director of the FBI to comply with this requirement within one year. The provision would further require the Director to submit to the congressional defense committees, the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate, and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives a report on the implementation of this provision, not later than six months after the date of enactment of this Act.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would limit the requirement to those Department of Energy (DOE) employees and DOE contractor employees who work in a program designated by the Secretary of Energy as special access or personnel assurance and accountability programs. The provision would require the Director, within 18 months of the date of enactment of this Act, to comply with this requirement. The provision would also modify the report requirement by requiring an assessment of the capability of the FBI to carry out this provision, an estimate of the additional resources that would be required, and the extent that contractor personnel would be utilized.

Protection of classified information during laboratory-to-laboratory exchanges (sec. 3145)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3164) that would require the Secretary of Energy to ensure that all Department of Energy (DOE) employees and DOE contractor employees who participate in laboratory-to-laboratory cooperative activities are fully trained in matters related to the protection of classified information and potential espionage and counterintelligence threats. The provision would further authorize the Secretary to create a pool of counterintelligence experts to be available to accompany DOE-sponsored delegations overseas with the purpose of identifying and mitigating potential espionage threats.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Restrictions on access to national laboratories by foreign visitors from sensitive countries (sec. 3146)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3156) that would prohibit the obligation or expenditure of any funds authorized to be appropriated or otherwise made available to the Department of Energy (DOE) by section 3101 or 3103 of the Senate bill for conducting a cooperative program (including studies and planning) with the People's Republic of China, Nations of the Former Soviet Union, or any nation designated as a sensitive nation by the Secretary of State beginning on the date that is 45 days after the date of enactment of this provision and continuing until 30 days after the date on which the Secretary of Energy, the Director of Central Intelligence, and the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation individually submit a certification that such programs: (1) are compliant with DOE orders, regulations, and policies relating to counterintelligence, safeguards and security, and personnel assurance program matters; (2) are compliant with Presidential Decision Directives and other regulations relating to counterintelligence and safeguards and security matters; (3) include adequate protections against inadvertent release of restricted data, national security information, or any other information that might harm the interests of the United States; and (4) do not represent an undue risk to the national security interests of the United States. The provision would require the certification be provided to the congressional defense committees, the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate, and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives. The prohibition would not apply to ongoing activities carried out under title III of this Act relating to cooperative threat reduction with states of the former Soviet Union or to programs carried out pursuant to a provision noted elsewhere in this Act for the materials protection control and accounting program of the DOE, but would apply to the Nuclear Cities Initiative and Initiatives for Proliferation Prevention.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 3190) that would require the Secretary of Energy to complete a background review on any individual who is a citizen or agent of a nation designated by the Secretary as sensitive before such an individual would be permitted access to a DOE national laboratory. The provision would prohibit any individual who is a citizen or agent of a nation designated as sensitive by the Secretary from entering a DOE national laboratory, beginning 30 days after the date of enactment of this section and continuing until 45 days after the date that the DOE Director of Counterintelligence, with the concurrence of the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, certifies that all appropriate measures are in place to prevent espionage or intelligence gathering activities by a sensitive nation. The provision would authorize the Secretary to waive the prohibition on any individual if he determines it is in the national security interests of the United States. The prohibition would not apply to any individual who is an employee or assignee as of the date of enactment of this provision, who has undergone a background review as required by this provision, or who is the representative of a nation that has entered into an agreement with the United States and the admittance of that nation is deemed by the Secretary to be in the interests of the United States.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary to complete a background review on any individual who is a citizen or agent of a nation designated by the Secretary as sensitive before such an individual would be permitted access to a facility of a DOE national laboratory other than areas where access is provided to the general public. The amendment would prohibit any individual who is a citizen or agent of a nation designated as sensitive by the Secretary from entering a DOE national laboratory other than areas accessible to the general public, beginning 30 days after the date of enactment of this section and continuing until 45 days after the date that the DOE Director of Counterintelligence, the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the Director of Central Intelligence individually submits a certification that the foreign visitors program at the national laboratories: (1) includes all appropriate measures to prevent espionage or intelligence gathering activities by a sensitive nation; (2) are compliant with DOE orders, regulations, and policies relating to counterintelligence, safeguards and security, and personnel assurance program matters; (3) are compliant with Presidential Decision Directives and other regulations relating to counterintelligence and safeguards and security matters; (4) include adequate protections against inadvertent release of restricted data, national security information, or any other information that might harm the interests of the United States; and (5) do not represent an undue risk to the national security interests of the United States. The provision would authorize the Secretary to waive the prohibition on any individual or delegation if he determines it is in the national security interests of the United States to grant the waiver. The prohibition would not apply to any individual who is an employee or assignee of the Department of Energy or a DOE contractor as of the date of enactment of this provision and who has undergone a background review as required by this provision. In addition, the provision would exempt from the moratorium activities relating to the Cooperative Threat Reduction Program or Materials Protection Control and Accounting Program.

Department of Energy regulations relating to the safeguarding and security of restricted data (sec. 3147)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3155) that would amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2282a) by inserting a new section that would authorize the assessment of civil penalties of not more than $100,000 per incidence for any person who violates an applicable Department of Energy (DOE) rule, regulation, or order related to safeguarding or securing restricted data. The provision would further authorize the Secretary of Energy to assess monetary penalties against Department of Energy contractors for any violation of a law, regulation, or Department of Energy Order relating to the protection of restricted data or formerly restricted data.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 3167) that would authorize identical penalties, but would eliminate an exemption in current law which would otherwise have prohibited assessing such penalties against certain non-profit contractors conducting work on behalf of the Department of Energy.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would limit the amount of any penalties that could be levied against the non-profit contractors to not more than the total fee earned by such contractors in a given fiscal year. The amendment would not allow the assessment of any penalties against such non-profit contractors until they entered into a new contractual agreement with the Department of Energy. The conferees are concerned that lax management by both the Department of Energy and its management and operating contractors has led to increased risks to U.S. national security. The conferees do not view this action as a precedent for any future actions or discussion that may occur in the coming deliberations on extension of the Price Anderson Act. The conferees believe that protection of classified information and materials is wholly within the control of such contractors and that all DOE contractors, including nonprofit entities, should be accountable in this area.

Increased penalties for misuse of Restricted Data (sec. 3148)

The Senate bill contained a provision (Sec. 3157) that would modify the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2274) by doubling the penalties for release or misuse of Restricted Data.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 3189) that would increase by twenty times the penalties for release of Restricted Data.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would increase by five times the penalties for release of Restricted Data.

Supplement to plan for declassification of restricted data and formerly restricted data (sec. 3149)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 1076) that would modify section 3161 of the Strom Thurmond National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1999 (Public Law 105–261) by requiring the Special Historical Records Review Plan, prepared jointly by the Secretary of Energy and the Archivist of the United States, to include those records that have been or are currently in the process of being declassified pursuant to Executive Order 12958.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Notice to congressional committees of certain security and counterintelligence failures within nuclear energy defense programs (sec. 3150)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3162) that would require the Secretary of Energy, after consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence and the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, to notify the congressional defense committees of each serious security or counterintelligence failure at a Department of Energy facility that the Secretary considers likely to cause significant harm of damage to the national security interests of the United States. The provision would require the Secretary to submit such notice not later than 30 days after learning of the failure. The provision would require the Senate and the House of Representatives to establish procedures to protect any classified or law enforcement information included in such notice.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 3166) that would require the Secretary of Energy to notify the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives whenever the Secretary has any knowledge that classified information relating to military applications of nuclear energy has been disclosed in an unauthorized manner to a foreign power or an agent of a foreign power.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary, after consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence and the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, to notify the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives of each security or counterintelligence failure or compromise of classified information at a DOE facility or a facility operated by a DOE contractor that the Secretary considers likely to cause significant harm or damage to the national security interests of the United States. The provision would require the Secretary to submit such notice not later than 30 days after learning of the failure. The provision would require the Senate and the House of Representatives to establish procedures to protect any classified or law enforcement information included in such notice.

The conferees note that the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives are the committees of Congress with primary oversight of atomic energy defense activities of the Department of Energy. As such, the conferees believe it is necessary that the two committees be kept fully informed of any counterintelligence or security failure or a serious compromise of classified information to a foreign power, either through espionage or through willful or accidental release by a U.S. citizen. This information is essential in order that the committees can effectively carry out appropriate oversight activities and determine if such a disclosure of classified information caused significant damage to U.S. national security interests. The conferees note that nothing in this provision shall be construed to modify or supersede any other requirement to report on intelligence-related issues to the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House or Representatives.

Annual report by the President on espionage by the Peoples Republic of China (sec. 3151)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 3182) that would require the President to submit a semi-annual report to Congress regarding the steps taken by the Departments of Energy and Defense, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Central Intelligence Agency, and other relevant agencies to respond to espionage activities of the People's Republic of China. The first report would be required to be submitted not later than January 1, 2000.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the President to submit an annual report to Congress not later than March 1 of each fiscal year.

Report on counterintelligence and security practices at national laboratories (sec. 3152)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 3169) that would require the Secretary of Energy to submit a report to Congress not later than March 1 of each year regarding the status of counterintelligence activities at Department of Energy (DOE) national laboratories, regardless of whether or not such laboratories carry out classified activities. The provision would require the report to include for each laboratory a description of: (1) the number of full time counterintelligence and security professionals employed; (2) the counterintelligence and security training courses conducted and any requirement that employees successfully complete such courses; (3) each contract awarded that provides an incentive for the effective performance of counterintelligence or security activities; (4) the services provided by employee assistance programs; (5) any requirement that an employee report foreign travel, regardless of whether such travel was for personal or professional purposes; and (6) any visit by the Secretary of Energy or the Deputy Secretary of Energy a purpose of which was to emphasize to employees the need for effective counterintelligence and security practices.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of Energy to submit a report to Congress not later than March 1 of each year regarding the status of counterintelligence activities at DOE national laboratories, regardless of whether or not such laboratories carry out classified activities. The provision would rquire the report to include for each laboratory a description of: (1) the number of full time Federal and contractor counterintelligence and security professionals employed; (2) the counterintelligence and security training courses conducted and any requirement that employees successfully complete such courses; (3) each contract awarded that provides an incentive for the effective performance of counterintelligence or security activities; (4) any requirement that an employee obtain approval and report foreign travel to a sensitive country, regardless of whether such travel was for personal or professional purposes; and (5) the number of trips by employees to sensitive countries.

Report on security vulnerabilities of national laboratory computers (sec. 3153)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 3193) that would require the National Counterintelligence Policy Board, after consultation with the Director of Counterintelligence of the Department of Energy (DOE), to submit annually not later than March 1 of each year to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the security vulnerabilities of the computers at the DOE national laboratories.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the National Counterintelligence Policy Board to submit a report not later than March 1, 2000, but would not require consultation with the Director of Counterintelligence of DOE.

Department of Energy counterintelligence polygraph program (sec. 3154)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3154) that would require the Secretary of Energy to prepare a plan describing how Department of Energy (DOE) employees and DOE contractor employees who have regular access to Restricted Data or Sensitive Compartmented Information might be polygraphed on periodic basis as part of a personnel assurance program. The plan would be submitted to the defense committees of Congress not later than 120 days after enactment of this provision. The plan would include recommendations for any legislation necessary to implement the plan. The provision would further prohibit obligation of more than 50 percent of the funds authorized to be appropriated or other wise made available to the Department of Energy in fiscal year 2000 for travel expenses until the plan is received by the defense committees of Congress.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 3168) that would require the Secretary of Energy to conduct, on a regular basis, counterintelligence polygraph examinations of DOE employees and contractor and consultant employees who have access to a program that the Director of Central Intelligence and the DOE Assistant Secretary for Defense Programs determine require special access restrictions. No covered employees would be granted access to such programs until they first undergo a counterintelligence polygraph examination. The provision would further require the Secretary to conduct polygraph re-examinations no less frequently than every five years or whenever the DOE Director of Counterintelligence determines is necessary.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of Energy to ensure that any new DOE, DOE contractor, or DOE consultant employee successfully complete a counterintelligence polygraph examination prior to being hired, if the Secretary determines that such an employee will have access to a program that the Secretary determines requires special access restrictions. Further, the amendment would require that a DOE, DOE contractor, or DOE consultant employee successfully complete a counterintelligence polygraph examination on a regular basis, but in no instance less than once every five years, if the employee has access to a program that the Secretary determines requires special access restrictions. No covered employees would be granted access to such programs until successfully completing a counterintelligence polygraph examination. The provision would further require the Secretary to conduct polygraph re-examinations no less frequently than every five years or whenever the Secretary determines is necessary.

The conferees direct that the Secretary not use failure of such polygraph examinations as the sole basis for the removal of any covered employee. The conferees further direct that such polygraph examinations not include questions regarding lifestyles.

Definition of national laboratory and nuclear weapons production facility (sec. 3155)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 3195) that would define national laboratory as the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, the Los Alamos National Laboratory, and the Sandia National Laboratories for the purposes of subtitle F of the House amendment.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision

The Senate recedes.

Definition of Restricted Data (sec. 3156)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3165) that would defined Restricted Data for the purposes of subtitle D of the Senate bill.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Subtitle E—Matters Relating to Personnel

Extension of authority of Department of Energy to pay voluntary separation incentive payments (sec. 3161)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3173) that would extend for a period of two years the authority of the Secretary of Energy to pay voluntary separation incentive payments to certain Federal employees.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 3162) that would extend the authority of the Secretary of Energy to pay voluntary separation incentive payments for one year and increase the amount of the contribution to the federal retirement system for employees of the Department from fifteen percent of the employee's salary to twenty-six percent. The provision would further require the Secretary to submit a report on the Department's use of this authority.

The House recedes with an amendment that would extend the authority of the Secretary of Energy to pay voluntary separation incentive payments for one year. The provision would further require the Secretary to submit a report on the Department's use of this authority.

The conferees believe that this authority is an essential tool available to the Office of Defense Programs to shape its future skills and capabilities as it reorganizes and downsizes its federal workforce. The conferees note that several recent reports, including "The Organization and Management of the Nuclear Weapons Program," issued by the Institute for Defense Analyses in February 1997, and the report of the Commission on Sustaining U.S. Nuclear Weapons Expertise, issued March 15, 1999, have concluded that the Department's Weapons Activities program is over-staffed in its management and oversight functions. In spite of these conclusions, defense programs personnel levels have remained steady since fiscal year 1998 and are projected to remain steady through fiscal year 2000. The conferees further note that this authority has been extended several additional years and believe that any further extension would be difficult to justify in the future. The conferees believe further reductions in federal staffing are justified and encourage the Department to make effective use of this authority.

Fellowship program for development of skills critical to the Department of Energy nuclear weapons complex (sec. 3162)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 3163) that would amend section 3140 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1996 (Public Law 104–106) which authorizes the establishment of a fellowship program for graduate and postdoctoral students who are U.S. citizens specializing in physical sciences relevant to the nuclear weapons complex. The provision would require recipients to work for at least one year as a Department of Energy employee. The provision would also require the Secretary of Energy to submit to the congressional defense committees by January 1, 2000 a plan establishing criteria for the awarding of fellowships and a description of service obligations to be incurred by fellowship recipients. The provision would also authorize $5.0 million for the fellowship program.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Maintenance of nuclear weapons expertise in the Department of Defense and Department of Energy (sec. 3163)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3171) that would enact measures to assist with nuclear weapons expertise within the Departments of Defense and Energy and their contractor workforces. The provision would: (1) revitalize the role of the joint Department of Energy-Department of Defense Nuclear Weapons Council to oversee the nuclear missions of the Departments of Energy and Defense; (2) require the Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Secretary of Energy, to submit an annual report on the activities of the weapons council; (3) require the Secretary of Defense to prepare a Nuclear Mission Management Plan; (4) require the Secretaries of Energy and Defense to prepare a Nuclear Expertise Retention Plan; (5) require that any reports on critical difficulties at nuclear weapons plants or laboratories of the Department of Energy be included in the supporting documents accompanying the annual nuclear stockpile certification sent to the President; and (6) amend section 179 of title 10, United States Code, to provide a mechanism to appoint an acting staff director for the Nuclear Weapons Council in the event the position is vacant for more than nine months.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

The conferees note with continuing concern that the important position of Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Nuclear, Chemical, and Biological Defense remains vacant. The conferees note this statutorily created position plays a vital role in maintaining viability and safety of the nuclear deterrent of the United States. The conferees encourage the President to fill this position as rapidly as possible.

Whistleblower protection program (sec. 3164)

The Senate bill included a provision (sec. 3160) that would require the Secretary of Energy to establish a whistleblower protection program to ensure that no Department of Energy (DOE) employee or DOE contractor employee may be discharged, demoted, or otherwise discriminated against as a reprisal for disclosing information relating to the protection of classified information which the employee reasonably believes to provide direct and specific evidence of a violation of any federal law, gross mismanagement, a gross waste of funds, abuse of authority, of a false statement to Congress on a material fact. The provision would protect such disclosures of information only if they are made to a federal entity designated by the Secretary of Energy to receive such information, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Inspector General of the Department of Energy, or a member of a committee of Congress having primary responsibility for oversight of the department, agency, element of the federal government to which the information relates, an employee of a committee of Congress having primary responsibility for oversight of the department, agency, element of the federal government to which the information relates and who holds an appropriate security clearance for access to the information.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary of Energy, acting through the Inspector General, to provide assistance and guidance to each protected individual who seeks to make a protected disclosure under this section to include: (1) identifying the persons or entities to which a disclosure may be made; (2) advising individuals on the steps to be taken to protect the security of the information to be disclosed; (3) taking appropriate actions to protect the identity of that individual throughout that disclosure; and (4) taking appropriate actions to coordinate that disclosure with any other federal agency or agencies that originated the information. The provision would require the Secretary to notify individuals of their rights under this section.

The provision would further require the DOE Office of Hearings and Appeals to review any complaint submitted by a DOE employee or DOE contractor employee who alleges that the employee has been discharged, demoted, or otherwise discriminated against as a reprisal for disclosing information relating to the protection of classified information which the employee reasonably believes to provide direct and specific evidence of a violation of any federal law, gross mismanagement, a gross waste of funds, abuse of authority, of a false statement to Congress on a material fact. The provision would further require that the information must have been disclosed pursuant to procedures established by the DOE Inspector General to protect the security of the information to be disclosed. The Office of Hearings and Appeals would be required to investigate all such complaints that are determined to be not frivolous. The provision would require the the Office of Hearings and Appeals would be required to provide an annual report on all such investigations and a summary of the results of such investigations to the congressional defense committees. In addition, the provision would require the Secretary to take remedial action when appropriate. The provision would further require the Secretary to submit a report to the congressional defense committees describing how the program would be implemented.

Subtitle F—Other Matters

Requirement for plan to improve reprogramming processes (sec. 3171)

The conferees included a provision that would require the Secretary of Energy to submit to the congressional defense committees, not later than November 15, 1999, a report on improving the reprogramming processes relating to the defense activities of the Department of Energy.

Integrated fissile materials management plan (sec. 3172)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3174) that would require the Secretary of Energy to develop a long-term integrated fissile materials management plan describing: (1) how the overlapping responsibilities of the Offices of Environmental Management, Nuclear Energy, Fissile Materials Disposition, and Defense Programs could achieve budgetary efficiencies through the consolidation or integration of fissile materials treatment, storage or disposition activities; and (2) any investments necessary at Department of Energy (DOE) sites that are anticipated to have an enduring plutonium management mission. The provision would require the plan to be submitted to the congressional defense committees not later than February 1, 2000.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Secretary to submit the plan not later than March 31, 2000.

The conferees believe that the DOE Offices of Environmental Management, Nuclear Energy, Fissile Materials Disposition, and Defense Programs have several overlapping and redundant activities in the area of plutonium and uranium management and that the Department can achieve programmatic and budgetary efficiencies by consolidating some activities of these offices.

Identification in budget materials of amounts for declassification activities and limitation on expenditures for such activities. (sec. 3173)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 3164) that would require that any future budget request submitted to the Congress by the Department of Energy (DOE) continue to identify, as a budgetary line item, funds that would be used to declassify records pursuant to Executive Order 12958 or to comply with any subsequent statutory declassification requirements. The provision would further limit the expenditure of funds by the Secretary of Energy for the declassification of records during fiscal year 2000 to no more than $8.5 million.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require that any future budget request submitted to the Congress by the Department identify, as a budgetary line item, funds that would be used to declassify records pursuant to Executive Order 12958 or to comply with any subsequent statutory declassification requirements. The provision would prohibit the automatic declassification of any DOE document that has not been reviewed for declassification unless the Secretary certifies to Congress that such declassification will not harm the national security of the United States. The provision would further require the Secretary to submit a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives on the efforts of DOE to declassify documents under its control.

The conferees note that the report required by this provision need not include information relating to any classification review or assessment conducted by DOE for any other federal agency.

Sense of Congress regarding technology transfer coordination for Department of Energy national laboratories (sec. 3174)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 3170) that would require the Secretary of Energy to ensure for the Sandia National Laboratories, Los Alamos National Laboratory, and Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory that: (1) technology transfer policies in patenting, licensing, and commercialization are consistent with other Department of Energy sites; (2) the contractor operating the laboratory make available to aggrieved private-sector entities expedited alternative dispute resolution procedures, including binding and non-binding procedures, to resolve commercialization, license, or patent disputes where the contractor is alleged to be at fault; (3) the alternative dispute resolution procedure to be utilized in any disputes be chosen jointly by the Secretary, the site contractor, and the aggrieved party; (4) the contractor submit an annual report to the Secretary regarding technology transfer successes, current technology transfer disputes involving the laboratory, and progress toward resolving such disputes; and (5) training of laboratory personnel responsible for patenting, licensing, and commercialization activities is adequate to ensure such employees are knowledgeable of appropriate legal, procedural, and ethical standards.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would express a sense of Congress that technology transfer policies in patenting, licensing, and commercialization at DOE national laboratories should be consistent and that training of laboratory personnel responsible for patenting, licensing, and commercialization activities be adequate to ensure such employees are knowledgeable of appropriate legal, procedural, and ethical standards.

Pilot program for project management oversight regarding Department of Energy construction projects (sec. 3175)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3176) that would direct the Secretary of Energy to initiate a project management oversight (PMO) pilot effort in at least one defense program and one environmental management construction project with a total estimated cost of at least $25.0 million. The PMO pilot projects would assess the effectiveness of using PMO service providers to help control cost and schedule overruns at large Department of Energy (DOE) construction projects. Such services would include monitoring the project's progress in order to determine if the project is on time, within budget, in conformance with the approved plans and specifications, and being implemented efficiently and effectively. The provision would require the Secretary to submit a report to the congressional defense committees on the effectiveness of the pilots not later than September 1, 2000. The provision would also require the Secretary to procure such services on a competitive basis from among those commercial firms that have expertise in managing large construction projects but do not currently manage or operate a facility where a pilot would be conducted.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees remain concerned that DOE has failed to take appropriate action to control the costs of large construction projects at DOE facilities. The conferees note a finding by the General Accounting Office that, as of April 15, 1999, all fiscal year 1999 new construction starts in the Office of Defense Programs were behind schedule by at least five months. The conferees further note that most large commercial construction projects enlist PMO-type services oversee day-to-day construction matters on behalf of the project owners. The conferees believe that the DOE, as an "owner" of many large and complex construction projects, would greatly benefit from PMO services.

Pilot program of Department of Energy to authorize use of prior year unobligated balances for accelerated site cleanup at Rocky Flats Environmental Technology Site, Colorado (sec. 3176)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3175) that would authorize the Secretary of Energy to utilize funds payable as award fees to contractors at a Department of Energy (DOE) closure site for the purpose of conducting additional cleanup activities at that site. The Senate provision would specify that funds be so used if the Secretary determines that such funds are not anticipated to be paid as award fees in the fiscal year that such funds are authorized to be appropriated and if the use of such funds for additional cleanup will not result in a deferral of payment of award fees at the site of more than 12 months. The provision would require the Secretary to report to the congressional defense committees not later than 30 days after exercising the authority granted by this provision.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would create a three-year pilot program at the Rocky Flats Environmental Technology Site under which the Secretary would be authorized to use up to $15.0 million of prior year unobligated balances in the defense environmental management account for accelerated cleanup at the Rocky Flats site. The provision would require the Secretary to notify the congressional defense committees not less than 30 days prior to exercising the authority granted by this provision and submit a report to the congressional defense committees, not later than July 31, 2002, on whether the authority granted by this provision should be extended.

The conferees direct that the Secretary, in notifying the congressional defense committees of an intent to utilize this authority, provide information at a level of detail that is comparable to any reprogramming request submitted pursuant to section 3121 of this Act.

Proposed schedule for shipments of waste from the Rocky Flats Environmental Technology Site, Colorado, to the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant, New Mexico (sec. 3177)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3178) that would require the Secretary of Energy to submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives, not later than 60 days after enactment of this Act, a proposed schedule for the commencement of shipments of waste from the Rocky Flats Environmental Technology Site to the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would include in the schedule a timetable for obtaining shipping containers and would also require the Secretary to submit the proposed schedule to the Committee on Commerce of the House of Representatives.

Comptroller General report on closure of Rocky Flats Environmental Technology Site, Colorado (sec. 3178)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3179) that would require the Comptroller General of the United States to submit a report to the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, not later than December 31, 2000, assessing the progress made in closing the Rocky Flats Environmental Technology Site. The provision would require the report would include the following elements: how future use decisions affect ongoing cleanup; whether the Secretary of Energy could provide additional flexibility to the site operating contractor; whether the Secretary could take actions at other Department of Energy sites that would accelerate closure of Rocky Flats; any additional developments that have occurred since the April 1999 Comptroller General report on Rocky Flats closure; the likelihood that the site will meet its 2006 closure goal; and those actions that the Secretary could take to ensure that the 2006 closure goal is met.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require the Comptroller General to assess how any failures to decide future uses of the site might affect current cleanup activities as well as any impact the proposed schedule to move mixed and un-mixed radioactive wastes to off-site locations will have on ongoing cleanup activities. The House amendment would further require the Comptroller General report to include recommendations for methods to accelerate closure of the site.

Extension of review of Waste Isolation Pilot Plant, New Mexico (sec. 3179)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3177) that would extend the authorization for the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant (WIPP) Environmental Evaluation Group for five additional one-year periods.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees note that the Environmental Evaluation Group provides independent reviews and evaluations of the WIPP design, construction, and operation as they relate to the protection of public health, safety, and the environment.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Civil monetary penalties for violations of Department of Energy regulations relating to the safeguarding and securing of restricted data

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 3188) that would amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2282a) by inserting a new section that would authorize the assessment of civil penalties of not more than $500,000 per incidence for any person who commits a gross violation of an applicable Department of Energy rule, regulation, or order related to safeguarding or securing Restricted Data. The provision would further authorize the Secretary of Energy to assess monetary penalties against Department of Energy contractors, for any violation of a law, regulation, or Department of Energy Order relating to the protection of Restricted Data or Formerly Restricted Data.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees note that the substance of this provision is addressed elsewhere in this Act.

Commission on Nuclear Weapons Management

The House amendment contained provisions (secs. 3151–3159) that would establish a Commission on Nuclear Weapons Management to examine the organizational and management structures within the Departments of Energy and Defense. The Commission would examine nuclear weapons: policy and standards; generation requirements; stockpile inspection and certification; research, development, and design; manufacturing, assembly, disassembly, refurbishment, surveillance, and storage; operations and maintenance; construction projects; and sustainment and development of high-quality personnel. The provision would address the procedures by which the members of the commission would be selected, the general rules governing the operation of the commission, the duties of the commission, the commission's reporting requirements, and the commission's powers.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees note that additional funds for DOE cyber security programs have been included in section 3103 of this Act.

Department of Energy polygraph examinations

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 3187) that would require the Secretary of Energy to conduct, on a regular basis, counterintelligence polygraph examinations of certain Department of Energy (DOE) employees and contractor and consultant employees who have access to a program that the Director of Central Intelligence and the DOE Assistant Secretary for Defense Programs determine special access restrictions. The provision would further require the Secretary to prescribe those regulations necessary to carry out this section.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees note that the substance of this provision is addressed elsewhere in this Act.

Investigation and remediation of alleged reprisals for disclosure of certain information to Congress

The Senate bill included a provision (sec. 3161) that would require the Inspector General of the Department of Energy (DOE) to review all complaints by DOE employees or DOE contractor employees that such employees have been discharged, demoted, or otherwise discriminated against as a reprisal for disclosing information relating to the protection of classified information that the employee reasonably believes would provide direct and specific evidence of a violation of any federal law, gross mismanagement, a gross waste of funds, abuse of authority, or a false statement to Congress on a material fact. The provision would require that the information be disclosed pursuant to section 3160 of the Senate bill. The provision would require the Inspector General to investigate all such complaints determined to be not frivolous. The provision would also require the Inspector General to provide a quarterly report all such investigations and a summary of the results of such investigations to the congressional defense committees. The provision would also establish a three percent surcharge to fund theater ballistic missile defense (BMD) development projects at the national weapons laboratories. The provision would require that such projects be established and executed consistent with the memorandum of understanding between the Secretaries of Energy and Defense required by section 3131 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1998 (Public Law 105–85).

The Senate bill contained no similar amendment.

The House recedes.

The conferees note that LDRD is a discretionary fund used by the directors of the Department of Energy national security laboratories to undertake innovative research and development initiatives proposed by laboratory personnel. However, the conferees believe that the laboratory directors should make every effort to prioritize and coordinate LDRD efforts. The conferees urge the laboratory directors to fully utilize resources of the laboratories to focus LDRD initiatives on significant national security challenges that confront the nation, such as theater ballistic missile defense. The conferees direct that these activities be consistent with the memorandum of understanding noted above.

Report on whether the Department of Energy should continue to maintain nuclear weapons responsibility

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 3183) that would require the President to submit to Congress, not later than January 1, 2000, a report regarding alternative organizational arrangements for managing nuclear weapons development, testing, and maintenance within the Department of Energy, including reestablishment of the Atomic Energy Commission as an independent agency.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Title XXXII—National Nuclear Security Administration

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 3165) that would require the Secretary of Energy to assign to the Assistant Secretary of Energy for Defense Programs direct authority over, and responsibility for, the nuclear weapons production facilities and national laboratories with respect to strategic management, policy development and guidance, budget guidance and formulation, resource requirements determinations and allocations, administration of contracts, environmental safety and health operations, integrated safety and management, safeguard and security operations, and relations with government agencies. The provision would also establish that certain nuclear weapons production facilities, national laboratories, and operations offices report directly to the Assistant Secretary for Defense Programs. The provision would further allow the Assistant Secretary to delegate to such operations offices a number of support functions, including operational activities, program execution, personnel, contracting and procurement, facility operations oversight, and integration of production and research activities.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would substantially reorganize the national security programs of the Department of Energy (DOE).

The conferees note that the Select Committee on U.S. National Security and Military/Commercial Concerns with the People's Republic of China (known as the Cox Committee) concluded that Chinese espionage efforts had successfully gathered sensitive information related to U.S. nuclear weapons designs. The conferees further note that the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board (PFIAB), chaired by former Senator Warren Rudman, after reviewing the security failures at DOE concluded that the root causes of the counterintelligence failures pertained to poor organization and a failure of accountability. The PFIAB noted that many previous efforts to improve organization and accountability at DOE had failed, and concluded that ". . . the Department of Energy is a dysfunctional bureaucracy that has proven incapable of reforming itself."

To correct these systemic problems, the conferees agree to establish the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA), a semi-autonomous agency within the Department that would be responsible for nuclear weapons development, naval nuclear propulsion, defense nuclear nonproliferation, and fissile material disposition; establish security, counterintelligence, and intelligence offices; and prescribe personnel, budgeting, and other management practices for the NNSA.

This provision would also establish the Department of Energy offices of Counterintelligence and Intelligence.

The Director of the Department of Energy Office of Counterintelligence would be a member of the Senior Executive Service and would be responsible for establishing policy for counterintelligence programs and activities at Department of Energy facilities in order to reduce the threat of disclosure of classified and other sensitive information at the Department facilities. The provision would also require the Director of the Office of Counterintelligence to report on the status and the effectiveness of the counterintelligence programs at facilities of the Department of Energy during the preceding year.

The Administrator would have authority over, and be responsible for, all programs and activities of the Administration, except for the functions of the Office of Naval Reactors as specified in Executive Order 12344. In addition, the provision would give the Administrator responsibility for liaison between the Administration and other elements of the Department of Energy and other federal agencies. The Administrator may establish Administration-specific policies, unless disapproved by the Secretary.

The provision would assign the Deputy Administrator the responsibilities, authorities, and accountability for all functions of the Office of Naval Reactors.

General Counsel (sec. 3217)

The conferees agree to include a provision that would establish a General Counsel for the Administration.

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 3158) that would require the Secretary of Energy to maintain an Office of Counterintelligence and an Office of Intelligence. The Office of Counterintelligence would be headed by a senior executive of the Federal Bureau of Investigation with experience in matters relating to counterintelligence. The Director of the Office of Counterintelligence would report directly to the Secretary of Energy and ensure that the Secretary, the Director of Central Intelligence, and the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation are informed regularly on the status and effectiveness of counterintelligence efforts at DOE sites. The Director would be required to submit an annual assessment to the Secretary, Director of Central Intelligence, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the defense committees of Congress on the effectiveness of counterintelligence efforts at DOE facilities. Such an assessment would be provided in both classified and unclassified form not later than March 1 of each year. The Director would be required to develop and implement specific security and counterintelligence programs to reduce the threat of loss of classified and sensitive information at DOE sites. The Director of Intelligence would also report directly to the Secretary and would be responsible for intelligence and energy security analysis.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 3184) that would require the Secretary of Energy to establish an Office of Foreign Intelligence and an Office of Counterintelligence.

The conferees agree to include a provision that would establish an Office of Defense Nuclear Counterintelligence and an Office of Defense Nuclear Security. The offices would be headed by a Chief of Defense Nuclear Counterintelligence and a Chief of Defense Nuclear Security.

The Chief of Defense Nuclear Counterintelligence would report to the Administrator and would implement counterintelligence policies directed by the Secretary and the Administrator. This Chief would develop programs for the Administration to prevent the disclosure of classified or sensitive information, and would develop and administer personnel assurance programs within the Administration.

The provision would require that the head of counterintelligence at each laboratory have extensive experience in counterintelligence activities within the Federal Government and is hired by and directly responsible to Director of the laboratory and is hired with the concurrence of the DOE Director of Counterintelligence.

The conferees agree to inclue a provision that would require the Administrator to establish and maintain a counterintelligence program at each laboratory or production facility. The Administrator would be required to assign an employee of the Office of Defense Nuclear Counterintelligence to each facility at which Restricted Data is located, other than a laboratory or a production facilities. This employee would assess counterintelligence and security matters at the facility.

Procedures relating to access by individuals to classified areas and information of Administration (sec. 3234)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 3191) that would prohibit unescorted access by a foreign national to any classified area, or access to any classified information, at any DOE facility engaged in defense activities unless the individual has a security clearance granted by the United States or has a security clearance granted by a foreign government which the Secretary of State determines is comparable to a clearance granted by the United States. The provision would prohibit the Secretary from terminating the employment of any foreign national who is also an employee of the Department, as of the date of enactment of this Act until a security clearance investigation is completed. Such employees could, however, be terminated if the Director of Counterintelligence determines it is in the national security interest of the United States.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the Administrator to establish procedures to ensure that individuals are not permitted unescorted access to any classified area, or access to classified information, of the Administration until security clearances are verified.

Government access to information on Administration computers (sec. 3235)

These procedures would provide that any individual who has access to information on an Administration computer be required, as a condition of such access, to provide to the Administrator written consent permitting access by an authorized investigative agency to any Administration computer. In addition, the provision would stipulate that, notwithstanding any other provision of law, no user of an Administration computer shall have any expectation of privacy in the use of that computer.

Congressional oversight of special access programs (sec. 3236)

The conferees agree to include a provision that would require the Administrator to submit an annual report to the congressional defense committees on the special access programs of the Administration. Each annual report shall contain budgetary information for special access programs and a brief discussion of each program. This provision would also require an annual report on the new special access programs with a justification for designating the program as special access, and an identification of existing programs or technologies that are similar to the subject of the new special access program. A new special access program would not be allowed to begin until 30 days after the defense committees have been notified that a new special access program is about to be initiated. The provision would also require a report to the congressional defense committees 14 days before any special access program is declassified.

The program and budget plan would be submitted at the same level of detail as the President's annual budget request to Congress and would include a description of anticipated workload requirements for each site. The provision would further require the Secretary of Energy, beginning in fiscal year 2001, to identify how each element of the President's budget request for weapons activities would help ensure that the weapons stockpile is safe and reliable as determined in accordance with the performance criteria established pursuant to section 3158 of the Strom Thumond National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1999 (Public Law 105–261) during each year of the five year period.

AMENDMENT NO. 27: Add at the end of the bill, the following new title:

TITLE VIII—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Hate Crimes Prevention Act of 1999".

SEC. 802. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) the incidence of violence motivated by the actual or perceived race, color, national origin, religion, sexual orientation, gender, or disability of the victim poses a serious national problem;

(2) such violence disrupts the tranquility and safety of communities and is deeply divisive;

(3) existing Federal law is inadequate to address this problem;

(4) such violence affects interstate commerce in many ways, including—

(A) by impeding the movement of members of targeted groups and forcing such members to move across State lines to escape the incidence or risk of such violence; and

(B) by preventing members of targeted groups from purchasing goods and services, obtaining or sustaining employment or participating in other commercial activity;

(5) perpetrators cross State lines to commit such violence;

(6) instrumentalities of interstate commerce are used to facilitate the commission of such violence;

(7) such violence is committed using articles that have traveled in interstate commerce;

(8) violence motivated by bias that is a relic of slavery can constitute badges and incidents of slavery;

(9) although many State and local authorities are now and will continue to be responsible for prosecuting the overwhelming majority of violent crimes in the United States, including violent crimes motivated by bias, Federal jurisdiction over certain violent crimes motivated by bias is necessary to supplement State and local jurisdiction and ensure that justice is achieved in each case;

(10) Federal jurisdiction over certain violent crimes motivated by bias enables Federal, State, and local authorities to work together as partners in the investigation and prosecution of such crimes; and

(11) the problem of hate crime is sufficiently serious, widespread, and interstate in nature as to warrant Federal assistance to States and local jurisdictions.

SEC. 803. DEFINITION OF HATE CRIME.

In this title, the term "hate crime" has the same meaning as in section 280003(a) of the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 (28 U.S.C. 994 note).

"(A) shall be imprisoned not more than 10 years, or fined in accordance with this title, or both; and

ALICE TENNISON

HON. HEATHER WILSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Mrs. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to your attention the outstanding work of Alice Tennison.

Alice lives in Albuquerque, New Mexico, and is a constituent of mine. Recently, Alice won the Education's Unsung Heroes Award for mentoring students and founding the Student Mentorship in Education Project. The Student Mentorship in Education Project gives high school students hands-on experience in leading elementary school classrooms.

I would also like to thank ReliaStar Financial Corporation and Northern Life Insurance Company for sponsoring the event.

A good education helps students achieve their career and life goals. Alice Tennison has helped provide a quality education in New Mexico. Her work touches the lives of our next generation of teachers.

Alice Tennison continues to contribute to New Mexico education and I hope she will continue to do so well into the future. Mr. Speaker, I ask that we recognize and thank Alice Tennison for her achievement.

INNOVATIVE RESPONSES TO YOUTH VIOLENCE AND SCHOOL DROPOUTS RATES

HON. ROBIN HAYES

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, educators in communities across the country are searching for innovative methods to assist families in combating the threats that plague so many of our nation's high schools. Drugs, juvenile violence, high school students dropping out of their education: schools have a responsibility to partner with parents in safeguarding our children from these hazards.

In 1997, the last year for which we have reliable statistics available, there were 706,000 violent crimes involving teenagers. To reduce this number, we have to start early: as former Winston-Salem, North Carolina police chief George Sweat has said, "the fight against crime needs to start in the highchair, not wait for the electric chair."

Nationwide, 5 percent of students drop out of school. Only 40 percent of high school dropouts are employed. Dropping out often leads students to drifting, trouble and sometimes crime and time in jail. As the demands of the workplace grow more dependent upon high levels of literacy and technical skill, high school dropouts will increasingly face problems in getting and keeping jobs.

The American family is the bedrock of hope for instilling values in children that can keep them on the right path. But our schools can help as well. The use of innovative methods to educate and encourage young people to respect themselves, to stay in school and out of trouble is essential. One such method is a public-private partnership to which over 40 percent of American schools belong. These schools work with the Channel One Network, an in-school news analysis program that reaches eight million American students daily. Studies have shown that public service announcements by this programmer for military recruitment and drug prevention have been extraordinarily effective. Students in Channel One Schools have more negative impressions of drug use. They are also more likely to consider enlisting in their nation's armed services.

I believe that schools must increase such effective programs in the areas of juvenile violence and high school dropout prevention. I intend to work hard to ensure that our government expands its support of our schools' efforts in this direction.

TRIBUTE TO OFFICER MICHAEL LEWELLEN

HON. LORETTA SANCHEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Ms. SANCHEZ. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor Officer Michael Lewellen for his commendable service to the United States Armed Forces. It is with great pride that I present Mr. Lewellen with seven prestigious military awards and decorations including the Bronze Star Medal, the Purple Heart, the Air Medal, the National Defense Service Medal, the Vietnam Service Medal, the Combat Medical Badge, and the Republic of Vietnam Campaign Ribbon with Device.

Our nation is graced with many treasures, though none so precious as the peace we enjoy in our prosperous country. I am honored to commend Mr. Lewellen for his contribution to safeguarding that peace. It is one of our nation's great strengths that men and women have answered their country's call, and continue to heed it today to prevent the devastation we have witnessed too often this century.

Fortunately, our society has been blessed with many leaders who learned the values of leadership—responsibility, accountability and loyalty—while wearing the uniform of their country. For without their dedication to duty, we would not enjoy the many freedoms a fortunate America has to offer.

Again, I offer Mr. Lewellen my sincerest congratulations. I join together with everyone in this room to celebrate Mr. Lewellen's patriotism and to pay tribute to his service to our great nation.

BRINGING SMILES TO FLORIDA

HON. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer my warmest congratulations to the dental community in Florida for their great success with Project: Dentists Care (PDC), which facilitates access to dental care for indigent or underserved populations throughout the State. In a typical year, over 700 dentists donate more than 10,000 hours to treat 6,000–7,000 patients, providing close to a million dollars worth of dentistry, all at no charge.

Project: Dentists Care Began in Palm Beach County in 1992, and now enjoys success throughout the State. Money raised from fund raisers such as the annual Dentist's Day in October, including the ball, the silent auction and art sales, helps buy supplies and equipment needed for the programs.

I am pleased to support the efforts of Project: Dentists Care, and I urge my colleagues to join me as I extend my support and best wishes for a successful Dentist Day.

COMMANDER JACKIE W. KYGER

HON. SOLOMON P. ORTIZ

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend a gentleman who does an outstanding job commanding a Coast Guard Station in my district, Commander Jackie W. Kyger.

Commander Kyger is an absolutely superb man. He commands the South Padre Island Coast Guard Station in Port Isabel, Texas, in my district and he will be leaving Friday, August 6, for the private sector. If he carries the same gung-ho, can-do attitude that he has employed in his service to our country into the private sector, I have no doubt he will retire a millionaire.

The Port Isabel station has a very tough mission, which centers largely on drug interdiction. They have quite a small station, with a tremendous amount of space to cover. In the last Congress, it came to my attention that the station desperately needed new equipment. They were making do with surplus equipment in their quest to interdict drug smugglers along a large chunk of South Texas coast. We ask our Coast Guard to do so much: search and rescue, boat safety, drug interdiction and fishing regulation enforcement, among others.

It is just not right to give them that enormous responsibility without the equipment to do the job. In the next Coast Guard Authorization bill, I made sure to include committee report language stressing the need for new equipment, and as a result, the Port Isabel Coast Guard station recently got two new utility vehicles that are currently being fitted. This speaks to Commander Kyger's leadership ability, ensuring that his people had the proper equipment to accomplish their mission.

Mr. Speaker, Commander Kyger will be greatly missed by the larger South Texas community, as well as the Coasties he commands. He is a devoted family man who is also committed to helping the community. He was of great help to a community project known as "Save Our Children," a non-profit group that targeted young people in the Valley, encouraging them to stay away from violence and drugs, and reassuring them that they are indeed loved and are a valuable resource to South Texas. He was also instrumental in forming a partnership with the Boys Scouts of America to create a U.S. Coast Guard Explorers Post, an activity that provides a positive focus for young people after school.

I ask my colleagues to join me today in commending Jackie Kyger, an outstanding patriot, officer and family man on his departure from Coast Guard Station South Padre Island this week.

FOREIGN OPERATIONS, EXPORT FINANCING, AND RELATED PROGRAMS APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2000

SPEECH OF

HON. ROBERT WEXLER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1999

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2606) making appropriations for foreign operations, export financing, and related programs for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, and for other purposes:

Mr. WEXLER. Mr. Chairman, I strongly oppose the Burton Amendment to H.R. 2606, the Foreign Operations Appropriations bill, which would limit U.S. foreign aid to India.

This amendment, which cuts essential aid to India, sends the wrong message to the government in Dehli. U.S./India relations have significantly improved since the end of the cold war. In reaching out to the United States and the international community, India has undertaken dramatic economic policy reforms to become a market-oriented economy. As of today, the United States is India's largest trading partner and largest investor.

The Indian government has also taken constructive steps to improve its human rights record. We must recognize the Indian government's efforts and progress, and assist them in taking further steps to reduce human rights abuses in their country.

Although the Indian government has made progress with respect to economic reforms and human rights, they face a much tougher goal of providing for a population of close to a billion people with a rapid population growth of 1.7 percent per year. Forty percent of India's urban population and half of the rural population live below the poverty level. The Burton amendment would cut crucial U.S. humanitarian aid to India that is desperately needed for disease control, population control, malnutrition, and rural development.

India which is an important strategic ally of the United States borders Iran and Communist China. Like the United States, India has many security concerns, including the direct threat of terrorism. Radical terrorist outfits trained in Afghanistan and Pakistan, including that of Osam Bin Laden, have targeted and executed innocent civilians in Kashmir.

I believe that the United States and India have already begun to see the benefits of improved bilateral relations. Unfortunately, this amendment reverses the gains made between our two democracies and denies humanitarian assistance to the most needy in India. I urge my colleagues to defeat this amendment.

INTRODUCTION OF THE MEDICARE PARAMEDIC INTERCEPT SERVICE EQUITY ACT

HON. SUE W. KELLY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Mrs. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the Medicare Paramedic Intercept Service Equity Act, legislation which will provide reimbursement for critically needed ambulance intercepts, no matter where they occur.

In the past, paramedic ambulance companies have billed Medicare for services administered to beneficiaries during an intercept. In May 1995, the Health Care Financing Administration discontinued allowing the paramedic ambulances to bill Medicare, stating that they only grant payment for services provided by the transporting ambulance, which under an intercept would be the non-billing volunteer ambulance. This policy precludes paramedic ambulances from receiving Medicare payment for their services.

According to the providers this policy has proven to be a nightmare. It creates a situation in which the volunteer personnel might choose to not call paramedic personnel, even if it is against their best judgment, because the patient may not be able to afford the cost of the paramedic care. The billing of the patient could also be avoided, if the patient is physically transferred from the volunteer ambulance to the paramedic ambulance, thereby making it the transporting ambulance but, in the process, wasting time that could be critical to the well being and survival of the patient. However, if the volunteer company does choose to call paramedic personnel, then the cost is passed on to the patient.

Although carriers have begun billing patients for their services, they often waive the charges for seniors who cannot afford to pay the bill. As a result of this policy, many paramedic ambulance companies are experiencing serious financial losses and may have to go out of business, which jeopardizes emergency care. Additionally, many seniors have taken to calling paramedic providers to describe their conditions to see if they would require their services, before calling the volunteer ambulance.

In 1997, Congress addressed this issue in the Medicare provision of the Balanced Budget Act. This provision amended the Social Security Act to provide coverage in rural areas for paramedic intercept services under Medicare Part B. This change was intended to allow paramedic ambulance companies to bill Medicare for their services despite the fact that they were not the transporting vehicle. Yet under the Health Care Financing Administration's proposed methodology, many areas which would commonly be thought of as rural are not considered as such under the rule. Thus, these areas have all the problems of being rural, yet have none of the protections that Medicare reimbursements for paramedic intercept services would provide.

As a result, one town with the fortune of being classified as rural has paramedic intercept coverage, while the town directly next door with the same basic rural nature, but a few more residents has no coverage. This leaves seniors stuck in the middle, confused as to what areas are covered, and scared to call for an ambulance for fear they will be charged with a bill they cannot afford. The policy of only reimbursing ambulance intercepts that occur in rural areas geographically discriminates against Medicare beneficiaries by arbitrarily setting standards for reimbursement that will help only those seniors with the luck of living in a federally defined rural town.

Paramedic intercepts should be covered by Medicare no matter where a senior lives. If a senior is in medical need of an intercept, then Medicare should pay for it. The Medicare Paramedic Intercept Service Equity Act takes the debate over coverage out of rural vs. urban and towards one of medical necessity. Specifically, this bill strikes the word "rural" from the ambulance intercept provision of the Balanced Budget Act. In doing this, all intercepts are covered whether they are in a rural area or not.

Please join me in providing seniors with the critical emergency services they need and cosponsor this important bill.

COSTELLO HONORS 300TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE VILLAGE OF CAHOKIA

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of the 300th Anniversary of the Village of Cahokia.

As we begin to near the end of this millennium, I ask my colleagues to join me in celebrating the history of the small towns within all of our districts. Throughout this year, Cahokia, a village in my district, continues to celebrate it's tricentennial anniversary, with reflection on its vital place in American history.

The Village of Cahokia derives its name, which means "Wild Geese", from the Cahokia Indian tribe. Today, it is recognized not only as a wonderful, thriving community of Southern Illinois but also as the site of the Cahokia Mounds, which is both an Illinois State Historic Site and a World Heritage Site. The Cahokians, members of the Illini Confederation, along with their relatives, the Tamaroas, were the first people known to inhabit this small and beautiful region in the Mississippi Valley. While the Cahokian tribe continues to provide a vital, unique character to the region, in 1699, the diversity of the community was further strengthened with Cahokia's founding by missionary priests from the Seminary of Quebec.

As the 18th century progressed, this community also became the principal commercial center in the mid-west. Specializing in the trade of Indian goods and fur, Cahokia's economic development thrived. This served as the impetus for prompting the expansion of Agriculture as a viable livelihood, which was so necessary to feed the rapidly growing community of settlers.

The Village of Cahokia also took pride in its role in winning a battle of the American Revolution. Captain Joseph Bowman and George Rogers Clark negotiated peace agreements in Cahokia at Fort Bowman with neighboring tribes of the Illini Confederation, and then launched an attack on British occupied Vincennes. Both their soldiers and ammunition were primarily supplied by the residents of Cahokia.

Cahokia has long been recognized as a significant force in Illinois politics. In the 18th and 19th centuries, the Cahokia Courthouse served as an important center of activity in the Northwest. At one point it was both the judicial and administrative center for a massive area which rose up to the borders of Canada.

Today, I am honored to represent Cahokia, which has embraced its heritage of both Native-American history, as well as the influx of French and other ethnicities, spurred by westward expansion. This close community of churches, civic groups, and businesses inspires us to remember the legacy of our forefathers, while also celebrating the future.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing the Village of Cahokia this month in commemoration of its 300th Anniversary!

MUSEUM FOR AFRICAN ART

HON. JERROLD NADLER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize one of New York City's premier cultural institutions, the Museum of African Art, and to invite my colleagues to visit the Museum over the August recess. Founded in 1984, the Manhattan-based Museum is the only independent museum in the United States devoted exclusively to historical and contemporary African art.

The Museum for African Art is dedicated to increasing public understanding and appreciation of African art and culture. Through exhibitions and catalogues of the highest aesthetic and scholarly merit, the Museum offers definitive research and scholarship on African cultural groups and their regional influences.

The Museum provides thematic comparison and exploration of artistic ideas reflected in the great variety of cultures in Africa, innovative methods of display and interpretation of African art to involve audiences directly in the exhibition process, and programs that stimulate lifelong learning and appreciation of African art and culture.

In April 1999, the Museum opened a groundbreaking exhibition entitled "A Congo Chronicle: Urban Art and the Legend of Patrice Lumumba." Consisting of 50 paintings by famed African artist Tshibumba Kanda-Matulu and several other urban artists of the time, this exhibition offers a uniquely personal encounter with the African independence movement as it was born and took hold among the population.

African art aficionados are looking forward to the September unveiling of the exhibit, Liberated Voices: Contemporary Art from South Africa. Featuring close to 100 works, including paintings sculptures, installations, photographs, and videos made since Apartheid ended in 1994. This exhibition highlights major trends in contemporary South African artistic practice. The exhibit will focus on the diverse works of young artists in today's South Africa. Through their personal experiences Museum visitors will gain a greater insight into this dynamic country.

Mr. Speaker, the Museum for African Art is a unique resource. I hope all of my colleagues will have the opportunity to visit the Museum to learn more about African art and its influence and significant contributions to our culture and society.

IN CELEBRATION OF THE BIRTH OF MORGAN JULIANN TAYLOR

HON. DAVID M. McINTOSH

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Mr. McINTOSH. Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday, July 28, 1999, Morgan Juliann Taylor was born. She is the daughter of my chief of staff, Jeff Taylor and his wife Julie. God blessed them with a beautiful, healthy child. When we debate issues on the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives which will impact the lives of children, I like to think of children I know, especially my own daughter, Ellie. From this time forward, I will also keep Morgan Juliann in my mind and heart as this great body works to make this country a better place to live for Ellie, Morgan and all of our children and grandchildren.

TRIBUTE TO ISAAC DARKO

HON. JOSÉ E. SERRANO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to once again congratulate and to pay tribute to Mr. Isaac Darko, a constituent of mine and a distinguished student at Columbia University in New York. He will be recognized for his academic and scientific achievements as a participant in the National Institutes of Health (NIH) Undergraduate Scholarship Program for Individuals from Disadvantaged Backgrounds (UGSP) on August 5, 1999 for the second year in a row.

Isaac graduated from the Health Professions and Human Services High School in 1997 and has just completed his freshman year at Columbia University. This summer he has been working at the NIH Department of Molecular Biology under the supervision of Dr. Alfred Johnson. He has been working on the epidermal growth factor receptor (EGFR), which is expressed in such cancers as breast and prostate cancer and in other cancer cell lines.

Mr. Speaker, the UGSP scholars search is highly competitive and nationwide. Currently, the program has 24 scholars from all over the nation, from institutions such as Columbia University, MIT, Harvard, Georgetown, U.C. Davis, and Stanford. In order to participate in the program, a Scholar must either have a 3.5 Grade Point Average or be in the top 5 percent of his/her class. Candidates must also demonstrate a commitment to pursuing careers in biomedical research and must be from a disadvantaged background. The current group is composed of 32 percent Hispanics, 32 percent African Americans, 21 percent Asians, 10 percent Caucasians, and 5 percent Native American, with a balance between the genders of 52 percent female and 48 percent male.

Mr. Speaker, being selected for this program for two consecutive years indicates that Isaac has demonstrated that he has the ability and the desire to be an asset and a role model in our community. We are proud of his accomplishments and I know he is taking full advantage of the opportunity presented to him. He is a terrific example for future participants in this program and others like it.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating once again Mr. Issac Darko for his outstanding accomplishments and also in commending the National Institutes of Health Undergraduate Scholarship Program for Individuals from Disadvantaged Backgrounds for offering opportunities to students like Isaac.

FAMILY BUILDING ACT OF 1999

HON. ANTHONY D. WEINER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced the Family Building Act of 1999.

This legislation will assure the millions of Americans suffering from the disease of infertility that the treatments they so desperately need will be covered by their health insurance plans.

There is nothing more basic to human beings than the desire to have a family. Yet, more than 6 million American families will suffer from infertility at some point in their reproductive lives. However, fewer than 1 in 4 employer-based insurance plans include coverage for infertility.

Imagine being given the devastating news that you have a fertility problem. Fortunately, your physician confidently informs you that the majority of couples who seek treatment for their infertility are able to have a baby. So you leave the office feeling hopeful if not optimistic. Then news even more devastating than your diagnosis comes your way: your health plan has decided that infertility is a disease they don't think worthy of covering. Their profits mean more than your inability to have a family.

It's unfair, and it happens too often in this country.

As fewer and fewer of our citizens are allowed any meaningful choice in health plans, Americans are being denied access to medical treatments that provide them with their only hope of becoming a parent. This is unfair, and the Family Building Act of 1999 will put a stop to it.

The insurance industry may claim that providing infertility coverage will cost them so much money that they will either go out of business or that employers will not be able to provide any coverage at all. This is not the case.

Studies completed by the American Society for Reproductive Medicine have shown that providing comprehensive infertility coverage will add only three dollars per member per year. Thirteen states have already passed similar legislation and it has not driven the insurance companies out of business, nor has it caused employers to drop their health insurance. In fact, in Massachusetts a study shows that the cost for HMOs actually went down when they started providing coverage.

Insurance coverage for infertility also allows for better medicine. We have all heard about and been concerned with the rising number of triplets, quadruplets and even higher numbers of multiple births from fertility treatments. Proper insurance coverage will allow patients and their physicians to pursue conservative, medically appropriate treatments and lower the risk of multiple births.

Consider: just three dollars a year could allow thousands of Americans to become parents. I think it's worth it, the American people think it's worth it and I hope this House will show it thinks it's worth it by passing the Family Building Act of 1999.

ISSUES FACING YOUNG PEOPLE

HON. BERNARD SANDERS

OF VERMONT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have printed in the RECORD statements by high school students from my home State of Vermont, who were speaking at my recent town meeting on issues facing young people today. I am asking that you please insert these statements in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as I believe that the views of these young persons will benefit my colleagues.

WORKERS' RIGHTS AND WELFARE REFORM

(On behalf of Daniel Peyser and Jenn Donohue)

Daniel Peyser: I'm going to be covering workers' rights, and specifically minimum wage, and maybe health care, and Jenn is going to be doing welfare reform, which will tie into it.

A key issue regarding the basic rights of workers is a livable wage. There was a minimum wage increase that was from $4.25 to $5.15, but it is still not livable. It is nice to have the wage increase, but it is not significantly helping us out. I make minimum wage, and it's a pain when you are not making enough money that you feel that you would deserve more for the work that you put in. But, over the past two decades, the minimum wage, with that one exception of that increase, has largely, for most people, stagnated or declined, and combined with inflation, the real value of the minimum wage hasn't increased very much since around 1955 to 1970.

It used to be, after World War II, that when productivity went up in companies that the workers got cut into the action and everyone prospered. But between 1983 and 1989, we have seen that, as companies reach record profits, that workers aren't getting cut in any more. And between 1983 and 1989, 99 percent of the new wealth that was accumulated went to the top 20 percent of the income groups.

America is now the most economically stratified country in the industrialized world. So there's a lot of issues that also tie in with livable wage. I mean, you have welfare, which is one issue. And one of the incentives perhaps for a lot of people who are on welfare would be a higher minimum wage. I think the answer to the problem would be to require companies to, first of all, raise the minimum wage to something that is easily livable. Ideally, I would have said $9 an hour or so. Cut back working hours, so require companies, based on how much money they make, to hire a certain number of workers, also based on their expenses, which would help unemployment rates.

Other issues that tie in are, a large part of having an unbalanced budget can be attributed to having stagnated wages. College education prices have gone up 80 percent over the past two decades, I think, as far as the cost of real value. And it is going to be harder and harder for people who are making minimum wage now to send their kids to college or to support their families.

Congressman Sanders: Jenn?

Jenn Donohue: As a senior in high school, the time is coming where I have to go out and find a job and employment. And, as Dan was saying, it bothers me in both respects, that there are people out there who are making minimum wage, trying to feed their kids, trying to buy necessities, basic things that people need, and they are getting welfare; and there are other people out there who don't work, who wait for the check to come every month, and that's what they live on, they have no initiative to get up, get out, and get a job.

Welfare was established for people in need, to help them get back up on their feet until the time came where they were okay, and they were all set, and they didn't need it as much as they did before. But now, I think, there is a problem where people are using it as their basic income. They have no desire to get up and get a job. And it is not the case with all people who are on welfare. Some people need it intensely. They are working two jobs, their spouse is working two jobs. Their kids are going to school, they need food and products all kids need.

I just think that something has to be done to change the way that welfare is going, because it is unfair to deprive people who really need the welfare of the money, when it is going to people who are just using it—I mean, there are women who get pregnant so they will have more money coming in the door. It is sick and it's twisted, and something needs to be done to reform welfare, so that the people who need it are getting it, and the people who need it and aren't doing anything to get it do something about that.

Congressman Sanders: Thanks for tackling a very, very important issue.

ZERO TOLERANCE FOR ALCOHOL

(On behalf of Laura Megivern)

Laura Megivern: My name is Laura Megivern, and I'm from South Burlington High School.

In all 50 states, it is illegal for anyone under 21 to purchase and possess alcoholic beverages. Following this logic, it should therefore be illegal for anyone under the age of 21 to have a blood alcohol concentration of anything over .00. However, this is not the case. In Vermont, anything under a .02 alcohol level is legal for someone under 21 years old, who cannot legally purchase or possess any alcoholic product.

It is required that all states have a zero tolerance law for people under the legal drinking age. A zero tolerance law is defined as any law that states that persons under 21 are not allowed to have a blood alcohol level of anything more than .02, .01 or .00. In 1994, according to the National Highway Safety Administration, motor vehicle traffic crashes cost the United States more than $150 billion in economic costs. Crashes involving 15- to 20-year-olds cost the United States years more than $21 billion in 1994.

Although they may be effective, there is a bit of a discrepancy in the fact that, although youth are not permitted to purchase or possess alcohol, it is all right for them to have some alcohol in their blood. One reason why the legal limit is set above zero is because of problems with the calibration of instruments, and because of the margin of error that may exist in the use of a Breathalyzer.

Other reasons brought up while the law was being created were that some foods may raise the alcohol level in breath, and that wine consumed in church as part of communion may raise the blood alcohol to an illegal level. The amount of wine ingested during communion would most likely be immeasurable, unless the Breathalyzer test was administered just afterwards. Also, an average high school student taking one dose of NyQuil would be under this limit, as the alcohol level would barely be measurable—although, in my opinion, if you feel bad enough to take NyQuil, a cough syrup advertised as helping someone get to sleep, you probably shouldn't be driving anyway. Some yeast products may also raise the alcohol content, but not to a measurable level, according to Dan Steinbar of the Day One Program, an outpatient rehabilitation program. He also says that, a beginning drinker without a high tolerance to alcohol, like a teenager, would be showing signs of impairment, especially of slurred speech and impairment of judgment, at a .02 blood alcohol concentration.

To get to a .02 blood alcohol concentration, you would need to drink a can of beer, 12 ounces, or 6 ounces of wine. In fact, for a 150-pound male, one can of beer, 5 ounces of wine, or 1.5 ounces of hard liquor puts the blood alcohol concentration above the legal limit even for someone over 21. However, if the male waited two hours to drive, he would be below it.

The rationale for zero tolerance is clearly understandable. According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, 21 percent of 15- to 20-year-old drivers involved in fatal crashes had some alcohol in their blood in 1996. In the same year, an estimated 846 lives were saved by the minimum-age drinking laws, and an estimated 16,513 lives have been saved by these laws since 1975.

Although there is a discrepancy in the legal limit and what one would hope would be the legal limit, I see the reasoning behind it, although I hope that, one day, equipment will be in use in Vermont that has no margin of error, so that we can have an actual zero tolerance law, rather than a .02 tolerance law, because zero should mean zero.

MAXINE DEAMOS

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, let me take this opportunity to recognize Maxine Deamos upon her retirement from the Lafayette Regional Health Center in Lexington, Missouri.

Ms. Deamos first started working at the former Lexington Memorial Hospital 34 years ago. During her tenure, she worked as a nursing aid in various departments of the hospital, including surgery, obstetrics, and the operating room. At the time of her retirement, Ms. Deamos was employed in the sterile central supply, the part of the hospital that provides sterile processing for surgical instruments and equipment. A standout employee during her 34 years, she was named Lafayette Regional Health Center Employee of the Year in 1967 and given the Smile Award, recognizing her cheery attitude, in 1997.

Maxine Deamos is an outstanding citizen of the Lexington community, and her wonderful personality will be missed by all at Lexington Regional Health Center. During her quieter times, Ms. Deamos plans to travel, work on her crafts, and spend time with her grandchildren. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that our colleagues join me in recognition of this outstanding Missourian.

A TRIBUTE TO LULAC

HON. LORETTA SANCHEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Ms. SANCHEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor one of the most influential Hispanic civil rights organizations in the United States. The League of United Latin American Citizens is celebrating its 70th anniversary of service to the Latino community.

In 1929 LULAC was formed in Corpus Christi, TX. Formed as a grassroots self-help organization, LULAC has a distinguished record of fighting for Hispanic education, employment and civil rights. Today, LULAC's 250,000 members make it the largest Hispanic organization in the U.S. Its 600 councils nationwide have been significant in empowering Latino communities in Texas, New Mexico, California, Florida, Washington, DC and New York.

Education has always been a chief priority for LULAC, providing more than half a million dollars in scholarships for Latino students. LULAC National Educational Service Centers serve over 18,000 students with counseling and dropout prevention programs. At the same time, its commitment to the assurance of equal access has been fundamental in LULAC's fight for affirmative action and women's rights.

In the Hispanic business community, LULAC has been important in furnishing training and management expertise, while also providing support for economic development. LULAC has also made great strides in combating Hispanic unemployment through the development of programs like SER-Jobs for Progress and Vocational Training Centers.

I am proud to represent the city of Santa Ana, which is the home of the first LULAC council in California. Its work in my community is indispensable. In fact, LULAC was responsible for desegregating Orange County Schools in 1946 with Mendez v. Westminister School District.

I congratulate LULAC for its 70 years of service to Hispanics in the United States. Its outstanding work should be an inspiration to other Latino leaders and elected officials, especially those here in Congress. I applaud LULAC's on its anniversary, and give thanks for all its good work.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL MODERNIZATION ACT

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 1660, the Public School Modernization Act. It is time for Congress to take action and make an investment in the future of America, our children. This legislation will provide significant help to local school districts in meeting their needs both to build new classrooms to keep up with skyrocketing school enrollments and to renovate and modernize their existing facilities.

Overall, California alone projects a $20.1 billion five-year cost for school modernization, including $11 billion for modernization and technology upgrades of old facilities. These technology upgrades include very basic amenities such as additional electrical outlets, and telephone jacks for internet connection.

Additionally, California will need $4 billion just to build new facilities to accommodate growing enrollment. California would get just over $3 billion under the Public School Modernization Act. This bill will provide $24 billion in interest-free funds for school modernization projects and deserves our support.

According to the Committee for Education Funding, the Republican education agenda is projected to cut over $3 billion from the Department of Education's budget including a $1 billion cut from Title I funding, a program aimed at supporting children in poverty. Funding will also be slashed dramatically for Federal Pell Grants and the Head Start Program.

It would be prudent to cut funding for wasteful defense programs, and unnecessary manned space exploration. It is time to make a significant improvement in the education of our children. I urge my colleagues to support HR 1606. Our children's future depends on it.

A DARK CHAPTER IN OUR NATION'S HISTORY

HON. ROBERT WEXLER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Mr. WEXLER. Mr. Speaker, I am here to support Italian Americans who were singled out during World War II as enemy aliens of the United States. Unfortunately, like many Japanese Americans who were persecuted during World War II, over 600,000 Italian Americans were subjected to harsh treatment by the American government, including being evicted from their homes and subjected to strict curfews. Hundreds of Italian Americans were sent to internment camps.

It is unconscionable that these hard working Americans were denied fundamental human rights and freedoms. Like many other ethnic communities in the United States, Italian Americans fought bravely in World War II and played a major role in defeating the Axis powers. However, many Italian Americans who remained in the United States during World War II faced discrimination including the families of soldiers who were injured or killed in Europe and in the Pacific.

I believe that it is incumbent upon the President and the United States government to acknowledge this dark chapter of our nation's history. Italian Americans who were victims of persecution are entitled to no less, and America needs to acknowledge the truth. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2442.

INTRODUCTION OF THE ELECTRONIC BENEFIT TRANSFER INTEROPERABILITY AND PORTABILITY ACT OF 1999

HON. BOB GOODLATTE

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced the Electronic Benefit Transfer Interoperability and Portability Act of 1999. The sole focus of the bill is to allow food stamp beneficiaries the ability to redeem their benefits in any eligible store regardless of location. Beneficiaries had this ability under the old paper food stamp system but lost it as states migrated to an electronic benefits transfer system.

Under the old paper food stamp system, recipients could redeem their food coupons in any authorized food store anywhere in the country. For example, a food stamp recipient living in Bath County, VA could use their food stamps in their favorite grocery store even if it happened to be in West Virginia. Similarly, a recipient living in Tennessee could visit their Mother in Virginia and purchase food for their children while away from home. Unfortunately, as we move to electronic delivery of benefits, this is currently not the case. My bill provides for the portability of food assistance benefits and allows food stamp recipients the flexibility of shopping at locations that they choose.

Across the country we are finding that people live in one state and shop in another. This cross border shopping is conducted for a variety of reasons. One of them is convenience, another is the cost of goods. The supermarket industry is a very competitive industry. Every week stores advertise specials in newspaper ads across the country. People not only shop at locations convenient to them but also shop around for the best prices. Customers paying with every type of tender except EBT have the flexibility to shop where they choose. Why shouldn't recipients of food assistance benefits be allowed to stretch their dollars in the same way that other consumers do, without regard to state borders?

EBT potability is simply allowing recipients of benefits under the food stamp program to redeem those benefits without regard to state borders at the stores they choose. In addition to portability, my legislation allows for the interoperability of EBT transactions. Interoperability can be simply defined as the ability of various computers involved in authorizing, routing and settling an EBT transaction to talk to each other.

I offered a Sense of the Congress Amendment to the Welfare Reform bill that Congress passed in 1996. My amendment urged states to work together to achieve a seamless system of food stamp benefit redemption. States did a decent job considering the circumstances. They are now asking for an extra nudge to realize the goal of my earlier amendment.

My legislation requires states to conform their EBT standards to a national, uniform operating system that the states themselves choose. The clear choice, the Quest operating system, has already been adopted by 33 states.

Pilot studies have been conducted to determine cost and other efficiencies that might be realized by EBT interoperability. The pilot program determined my bill would only cost the Food Stamp Program $500,000. That's not a lot of money for an $18 billion program. Also, the State of Missouri found around $32 million in abuse of the program that they never would have found if their EBT system couldn't talk with neighboring state systems.

Mr. Speaker, the bill I introduce today is simple. It returns the national redemption convenience to the beneficiaries of the program, gives the states the guidance they are looking for, and provides another tool in the fight against fraud, waste and abuse in the Food Stamp Program. Thank you for this time and I urge support from the membership for the Electronic Benefit Transfer Interoperability and Portability Act of 1999.

AMERICAN INVENTORS PROTECTION AT OF 1999

SPEECH OF

HON. MICHAEL P. FORBES

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 3, 1999

Mr. FORBES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to a bill that jeopardizes America's future prosperity by endangering the protection of our nation's independent inventors. HR 2654 seeks to extensively reform the patent process, which should only occur after deliberative discussion and with the opportunity for amendment. This bill will pass this body without even the courtesy of open debate. Such an important matter demands a thorough dialogue.

Small inventors, like the industrious citizens of Eastern Long Island, provided sparks of inspiration that helped build this nation. The Constitution ensures that inventors have the exclusive right to the product of their efforts. The bill upon which HR 2654 is based would severely erode that protection. Without considered debate and extensive review of HR 2654, we have no idea whether it would be similarly harmful.

Technology has driven America's latest economic boom. It is the foundation of the new economy as we move into the 21st Century. Bill Gates, Steve Jobs, and Raymond Damadian, the inventor of the MRI, were once independent inventors whose ideas have changed the face of society and how we view ourselves. Their creations were protected and have contributed to the prosperity America now enjoys. Tomorrow's inventors deserve the same treatment.

Mr. Damadian, a valued constituent of mine, has written extensively on the issue of patent reform given his unique position as an independent inventor who has seen the impact of his ideas on the lives of his fellow citizens. In correspondence with our colleague, Representative Manzullo, he strenuously objected to passing this bill that could cost independent inventors a right protected by the U.S. Constitution. I would like to place that letter into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point.

In more depth, he explored the problems with HR 2654's companion bill, S. 507, in a highly erudite letter to the Senate Majority Leader, TRENT LOTT. In that correspondence, he highlights the U.S. patent as "one of America's great blessings" and clearly outlines the serious problems with that bill from removing the U.S. Patent Office from the purview of Congressional oversight to eroding cherished Constitutional guarantees.

Mr. Speaker, as Mr. Damadian has written, Congress should not hastily pass laws that could have far-reaching impacts without and discussion. It is clear that we do not know what the effects of HR 2654 will be. We owe it to our independent inventors, and to our future, to be sure.

FONAR CORPORATION,
Melville, NY, August 3, 1999.

Hon. DONALD MANZULLO,
House of Representatives,
Cannon HOB, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MANZULLO: It has come to my attention that an effort is under foot to steal the U.S. Patent System in what I consider an outrageous usurpation of power. the House of Representatives intends to pass a bill, H.R. 2654, that will void the constitutionally granted patent rights of independent inventors everywhere.

Remarkably it is doing so without even a written bill informing the affected parties or even their Representatives what the bill contains. Even more remarkably it is doing it under a suspension of the rules, whose predicate is that there is no opposition to the bill, when independent inventors everywhere are BOILING over the prospect of losing their constitutionally granted rights to a patent.

Please be advised that Roberts Rines speaks only for himself and not for the rest of us great masses of independent inventors, whose rights are being taken away without a hearing, without a vote, without a single sentence of the bill to view and in the darkness of the night, a villainy that will live in infamy!

Sincerely yours,
RAYMOND DAMADIAN,
President and Chairman; Inductee, National Inventors Hall of Fame.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE B-2 BOMBER

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, let me take this means to recognize the tenth anniversary of the first flight of the B–2 bomber. The anniversary was recently celebrated at a ceremony at Air Force Plant 42 in Palmdale, CA, on July 17, 1999.

The first public display of the B–2 was in late 1988, at Air Force Plant 42 in Palmdale, CA. This was followed by the first flight of the B–2 on July 17, 1989, at Edwards Air Force Base, CA. Northrop Gumman's Military Aircraft Systems Division unveiled its brand new product—a low-observability, Multi-role bomber that can fly 6,000 nautical miles (9,600 kilometers) without refueling. The plane's revolutionary design, while instantly recognizable to the human eye, makes it all but invisible to radar.

The B–2 is an engineering marvel. The plane's low-observability characteristic derives from a combination of reduced infrared acoustic, electromagnetic, visual, and radar signatures. These facts make it difficult for even the most sophisticated defensive systems to detect and engage the B–2. While most of the technical aspects of the plane remain classified, the B–2 owes some of its stealth capabilities to special coatings, the flying wing design, and the composite materials of which it is made. These innovations are complemented by the highest-precision bombing technology in existence. The B–2 is now outfitted with the Joint Direct Attack Munition (JDAM) guidance kit. This system combines the Global Positioning System and Inertial Navigation System for incredibly accurate bombing.

The B–2 is based at Whiteman Air Force Base, near Knof Noster, MO. The first B–2, the Spirit of Missouri, was delivered to Whiteman on December 17, 1993. During the recent air war, B–2 made 30-hour round-trip missions from this base to Kosovo, where they dropped eleven percent of the precision ordnance while flying less than one percent of the sorties. As General Leroy Barnidge said at the tenth anniversary ceremony, "The airplane exceeded everybody's expectations. It's got a war-fighting capability that is second to none."

Mr. Speaker, I know that all of our colleagues in the House will join me in celebrating the tenth anniversary of the most revolutionary design in bombing aircraft since World War II.

IT'S TIME TO CONSIDER A PATIENTS' BILL OF RIGHTS

HON. DENNIS MOORE

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, the people of Kansas' Third District sent me to Washington, D.C., to represent their concerns and do all I can to address major, pending federal issues. For this reason, I was very disappointed when it became apparent in the last few days that the House would not be considering proposals to enact a Patients' Bill of Rights.

One of my first actions as a freshman Member of Congress was to join as an original cosponsor of H.R. 358, the Patients' Bill of Rights. This important legislation will ensure basic rights for patients and give them the protections they deserve. While the majority was unable to reach the consensus necessary within their caucus to bring a proposal in this area before the House for consideration this week, I am pleased that Commerce Committee Ranking Democrat JOHN DINGELL has continued active discussions with three members of the majority who are physicians—Doctors GANSKE, COBURN and NORWOOD—in an attempt to reach a bipartisan consensus on a proposal to provide meaningful protections for managed care patients and physicians.

I also want to bring to the attention of my colleagues a recent newspaper column by Steve Rose, the chairman of Sun Publications, which publishes the Johnson County Sun and several other newspapers that serve my congressional district. I commend to everyone Mr. Rose's commentary regarding the real-world problems that indicate a need for enactment this year of a Patients' Bill of Rights.

DARLA WANTS HER RIGHTS

My good friend Darla is all for the Patients' Bill of Rights. She's had it up to here and won't take it anymore.

Just last week, Darla called her doctor to ask if he thought it might be a good idea for her to try a new medication on the market called Celebrex, for her arthritis. Darla also has a stomach disorder, ulcerative colitis, so she has to be careful of side effects.

Her doctor thought Celebrex was a good medication to try, at first in a small dose. So, he called the pharmacy in Overland Park and ordered a 30-day supply. When Darla arrived at the counter, however, she met trickled-down red tape, straight from the insurance company.

The pharmacist explained that the health insurance provider had denied the prescription until Darla tried a generic brand first.

"What's the difference between the generic drug and Celebrex?" asked Darla. The pharmacist replied, "They're about the same, except the generic drug can be a little harder on your stomach."

"That won't do," replied Darla, "I have ulcerative colitis, and I can't stand any medications that irritate the stomach."

The pharmacist was sympathetic, but there was nothing to be done. Darla was advised to consult her doctor, who could contact the insurance company.

That's exactly what Darla did. She called her doctor and explained what had happened.

Said the doctor, "I'll contact the insurance company, and get this resolved."

A day later, Darla got a call from her doctor.

"I just spent an hour-and-a-half on the phone with the insurance company," said the doctor. "I could not speak with anyone with any medical background. After being put on hold three times, and being switched from one person to another, all I got was a clerk who wouldn't budge. I lost."

Darla is still fuming.

There are millions of Darlas out there. And when the President calls for a Patients' Bill of Rights, he has a lot of folks clapping.

Ironically, the President's proposal would do nothing for Darla. It only addresses mandatory emergency room care, an appeals process when insurance companies deny critical procedures, and the right of patients to sue insurance companies.

Nonetheless, Darla figures, probably correctly, that if this first Bill of Rights can be passed, it undoubtedly will be amended later to deal with some of her issues.

Insurance companies will scream that governments' intervention will only drive up health care costs. And they're probably right.

But if you asked Darla, she would be glad to pay a little more to let the insurance companies know they cannot just roll over her, or her doctor.

The Bill of Rights cure might be worse than the insurance disease, but Darla is so frustrated, she says she's willing to take that risk.

CHILDREN'S ASTHMA RELIEF ACT OF 1999

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleague, FRED UPTON, in introducing the Children's Asthma Relief Act of 1999.

Asthma is one of the most significant and prevalent chronic diseases in America. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) reports that 6.4 percent of the population, or 17.3 million Americans, report having asthma. This represents a dramatic 75 percent increase in self-reported cases from 1980 to 1994.

Asthma is disproportionately hurting children. Today, it is the most common childhood chronic disease. Five million American children have asthma. And as Surgeon General David Satcher recently concluded, the United States is "moving in the wrong direction, especially among minority children in the urban communities." The most devastating indicator of our Nation's lack of progress is the news that, from 1980 to 1993, the mortality rate for children and teens with asthma rose a staggering 78 percent.

Just a few days ago, Dr. Philip Landrigan reported in the Journal of Asthma that higher asthma hospitalization rates are associated with children, communities of color and the poor. The potential causes for the disproportionate impact of asthma are wide ranging, from the lack of preventive care, poor housing conditions and increased exposure to indoor allergens, to sedentary lifestyles and the siting of polluting commercial facilities.

Our country can and must do more to prevent and treat asthma. I am pleased to introduce the Children's Asthma Relief Act of 1999, which was originally introduced by DICK DURBIN and MIKE DEWINE in the Senate. This legislation provides $50 million for pediatric asthma prevention and treatment programs, allowing states and local communities to target and improve the health of low-income children suffering from asthma. The Act would also increase the enrollment of these children into Medicaid and state Children's Health Insurance Programs (CHIP), such as California's Healthy Families.

I am also pleased that the Act includes mobile "breathmobiles" among the community-based programs eligible for funding. These school-based mobile clinics were developed by the Southern California chapter of the Asthma and Allergy Foundation of America, in conjunction with Los Angeles County, Los Angeles Unified School District and the University of Southern California.

This legislation has the support of leading child health and asthma organizations, including the American Lung Association, the American Academy of Pediatrics, Association of Maternal and Child Health Programs, the National Association of Children's Hospitals, the American Academy of Chest Physicians and the Children's Health Fund.

As an honorary co-chair of Asthma Awareness Day, I urge my colleagues to join us in cosponsoring the Children's Asthma Relief Act of 1999.

INTRODUCTION OF A BILL TO EXPAND ALASKA NATIVE CONTRACTING OF FEDERAL LAND MANAGEMENT

HON. DON YOUNG

OF AKASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce a bill to expand Alaska Native contracting of Federal land management functions and activities and, promote hiring of Alaska Natives by the federal government within the State of Alaska.

This bill was developed in response to my request to the Alaska Federal of Natives at their retreat in August of 1998. Pursuant to the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, tribes are authorized to enter into contracts with the Department of the Interior to directly administer programs previously administered by that agency. Congress strongly advocated this change to allow tribes to provide direct and improved services to their members.

The bill entitled "Alaska Federal Lands Management Demonstration Project" would direct the Secretary of the Interior to enter into a demonstration project in fiscal years 2000 and 2001 with no less than six eligible Alaska Native tribes or tribal organizations to manage a conservation unit or other public land unit within the closest proximity of that tribal organization.

The bill further directs the Secretary to fully fund these demonstration projects in the same manner he would have funded the programs if they were still being managed by the Department of the Interior.

It has always been my strong belief that Alaska Natives can manage conservation units or national park systems units as well or even better than the federal government. Alaska Natives have demonstrated their reliance of the land, the conservation of its bounty and great respect for the cautious management of its resources to preserve for future generations. I believe that Alaska Natives should be given the opportunity to manage federal conservation units that are in close proximity to their own lands.

The Alaska regional non-profits worked long and hard to carefully draft a bill which would have the support of the Alaska Federation of Natives and all of the Alaska regional non-profits. I believe it is time that we authorize Alaska Native entities to manage federal conservation units in the manner consistent with lands that they have carefully preserved and utilized for thousands of years. This bill does exactly that.

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that on August 14th Brookfield Zoo will celebrate the grand opening of its newest attraction, the Salt Creek Wilderness exhibit.

Representing a northeastern Illinois wetland, Salt Creek Wilderness includes the existing Indian Lake, the Ellen Thorne Smith nature trail, and a new demonstration wetland exhibit called Dragonfly Marsh. Guests will be able to hike along a wood-chipped trail that circles the 4-acre lake to see trumpeter swans and several other waterfowl species. At the north end of the lake, the trail is paved and leads onto a wheelchair-accessible boardwalk that overlooks Dragonfly Marsh.

Support for the Salt Creek Wilderness project comes from the Chicago Zoological Society, Forest Preserve District of Cook County, Illinois Environmental Protection Agency, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency—Region 5, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, The Conservation Fund, Army Corps of Engineers, and the Urban Resources Partnership. With the assistance of these project partners, the new exhibit will help to raise awareness of the importance of protecting not just animals in other parts of the world, but also species and natural habitats in our own communities.

Brookfield Zoo has always been a leader among zoos around the world. The zoo's mission is to focus on enhancing visitor understanding of the critical need for people to live more sustainable and harmoniously with the natural world through naturalistic environmental settings and accompanying interpretive materials. I invite all my colleagues to join me in celebrating the opening of the Salt Creek Wilderness exhibit, which, I am certain, will greatly strengthen the zoo's mission.

A BILL TO REPEAL THE SPECIAL OCCUPATIONAL TAX (SOT) ON THE SALE OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES

HON. DAVE CAMP

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, along with several of my colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee, Ms. THURMAN, Mr. NUSSLE, Mr. MATSUI, Mr. MCINNIS, and Mr. JOHN LEWIS, I am introducing a bill today to repeal the Special Occupational Tax (SOT) on the sale of alcoholic beverages.

We are introducing this bill to alleviate a problem that many of our constituents have raised with us. I know that many of our colleagues have also heard from convenience store owners, innkeepers, restaurant owners, vintners, wholesalers and other small business owners complaining about the burden of the Special Occupational Tax on the sale of alcoholic products.

The SOT is an annual tax imposed on all businesses that manufacture, distribute or sell alcohol products. Whether it's a seasonal restaurant, an Elks Lodge, convenience or grocery store, or even a campground or florist that delivers wine with flowers—no one is spared from the tax.

However, it is especially burdensome for small retain stores. Over 90 percent of all SOT revenue comes from retailers. In addition, small producers—especially wineries—have a difficult time meeting the obligations of this tax.

A recent General Accounting Office study, which conceded that the alcohol industry is a heavily taxed and regulated industry already, illustrated the problems caused by this tax, particularly on small business owners. This tax is an unnecessary burden and should be eliminated.

I urge all of my colleagues to join me as cosponsors on this bill to repeal this unfair tax on small businesses.

HONORING MATTHEW EMMONS ON CAPTURING A GOLD MEDAL AT THE PAN AMERICAN GAMES

HON. JIM SAXTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to congratulate a young man from Pemberton Township, New Jersey, Matthew Emmons. Matthew brought home the gold with a near perfect score in the men's Prone Free Rifle competition at the 1999 Pan American games in Winnipeg, Canada. Matthew has made his country and the Pemberton Township community proud with his resounding victory under difficult conditions and against some of the world's finest athletes.

The sport of small-arms target shooting dates from the invention of the pistol and the rifle in the 16th century. For several centuries, the sport was contested only in sporadic impromptu fashion, because the firearms of that period were too undependable and inaccurate to meet the requirements of large-scale organized competition. Turkey shoots and weekend target-shooting matches were popular among the frontiersmen of colonial America.

During the American Revolution (1775–1783) and the American Civil War (1861–1865) rural sharpshooters played a strategic role as snipers. Popular interest in rifle shooting reached new heights after the Civil War, when the sport became a favorite diversion of city dwellers, groups of whom organized weekend target-shooting excursions into the countryside. New advances in the manufacture of weapons and ammunition, meanwhile, resulted in high standards of accuracy and reliability. By 1870, conditions were ripe for organized regional and national competition. Matthew has added to this great and venerable history with his honorable performance.

Mr. Speaker, Matthew's mental and physical fortitude guided him to victory. His patience, steadiness, clear vision and accuracy will likely lead to success at the University of Alaska, Fairbanks where he has enrolled, and to greater accomplishments in Olympic competition.

A TRIBUTE TO WILL RUBENS

HON. PETER T. KING

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to acknowledge just how fortunate I, my staff and the people of the Third District of New York were to have an intern that could serve as both Commissioner of Food and Beverage and Director of Internal Security for the past two months. To some he was known as Will Rubens but to me he was simply, "The Commish". Forget the fact that my Notre Dame doormat was stolen or the fact that my model E–2C Hawkeye was vandalized under his watch. In his investigation of these crimes, the Commish' was undeterred and never allowed conspiracy theories to be generated by anyone other than himself. There was never a business card fight he didn't prematurely end for the sake of my staff or a private conversation he didn't interrupt. Despite the increase in crime in my office over the last two months I know that the Commish's powers are being wasted here while numerous crimes of ineptitude go unresolved on the football fields of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor—an ineptitude which will be glaringly disclosed when Notre Dame's Fighting Irish pulverize the Wolverines on September 4th. I am confident that the Commish' will go on to bigger and better things and it has truly been a pleasure and honor to have him work in my office this summer. His intelligence and unique sense of humor will be missed. I thank you Will for all your hard work and effort. All the best.

INTERNET PHARMACY CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT OF 1999

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues, RON KLINK, JOHN DINGELL, and BART STUPAK, in introducing the Internet Pharmacy Consumer Protection Act of 1999.

While the Internet is transforming global finance and culture, it is also raising novel questions about the practices of medicine and pharmacy. There is no question that the World Wide Web and other forms of e-commerce have facilitated consumer access to health information and products. Patients clearly benefit from the rapid dissemination of reliable medical knowledge, and from novel, convenient ways of receiving health care.

But unwary consumers are also increasingly exposed to fraud or quackery from anonymous, unaccountable vendors. Illegal, unsafe or unapproved drugs and dietary supplements are more widely available than ever. Hundreds of offshore and domestic "pill mills" dispense Viagra or Xenical to patients sight unseen—as well as to shorthair cats, the deceased, and patients with life-threatening counterindicated health conditions, as an investigation by WWMT of Kalamazoo, Michigan discovered.

On July 30, the Commerce Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations held a hearing on online pharmacies. We heard a clear message from the testimony of Federal Trade Commission, the Food and Drug Administration, the Department of Justice, state authorities like the Texas Department of Health, and investigative media—regulators simply cannot enforce existing laws to protect consumers from illegal online pharmacies unless they know who is responsible and where they are.

The Internet Pharmacy Consumer Protection Act of 1999 requires very simple disclosures from online pharmacies. Tell us your name and place of business. Tell us where your pharmacy is licensed. And tell us where your online physician, if any, is licensed. That's all.

With this basic information, regulators are hamstrung. No enforcement is possible or requires unsustainable commitments of limited law enforcement resources. But enactment of and compliance with this legislation would quickly separate legitimate from illegitimate online pharmacies.

Failure to comply with these minimal requirements would also help warn consumers from questionable websites. In fact, Congress and the Administration are already aggressively encouraging responsible online businesses to provide comparable disclosures regarding their privacy policies. The lack of licensure and privacy information at an online pharmacy should provide a clear warning of caveat emptor.

Nor does this legislation pose a technical barrier to e-commerce. It only asks online pharmacies to provide the same licensure information as brick and mortar pharmacies do when they hang framed licenses on the wall. It is a simple matter to add a few new links to online pharmacy sites. In fact, any person with rudimentary knowledge of HTML could write up the necessary information and upload it to a website in a matter of minutes.

The Internet Pharmacy Consumer Protection Act of 1999 is a simple and commonsense way to help federal and state authorities enforce existing consumer and public health protections. Responsible online pharmacies are likely already in compliance with the legislation, or could be in a matter of minutes. But illegal, unprofessional or questionable online pharmacies will be exposed to greater scrutiny and more susceptible to the enforcement of essential legal protections and State licensure requirements.

I urge my colleagues to join us in cosponsoring the Internet Pharmacy Consumer Protection Act of 1999.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO AMEND THE ALASKA NATIVE CLAIMS SETTLEMENT ACT

HON. DON YOUNG

OF ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that would address several matters of concern to Alaska Natives through an amendment to the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (ANCSA).

As my colleagues know, ANCSA was enacted in 1971, stimulated by the need to address Native land claims as well as the desire to clear the way for the construction of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline and thereby provide our country with access to the petroleum resources of Alaska's North Slope. As the years pass, issues arise which require amending that Act. The Resources Committee as a matter of course routinely considers such amendments and brings them before the House.

Consequently, I am introducing this bill containing several such amendments to ANCSA in order to facilitate having its provisions circulated during the upcoming Congressional recess through the Congress and the Administration as well as the State of Alaska for review and consideration.

This bill has nine provisions. One provision would allow common stock to be willed to adopted-out descendants and another would clarify the liability for contaminated lands. The clarification of contaminated land would declare that no person acquiring interest in land under this Act shall be liable for the costs of removal or remedial action, any damages, or any third party liability arising out or as a result of any contamination on that land at the time the land was acquired under this Act.

SECTION 5. ALASKA NATIVE VETERANS

Section 5 of the bill amends the Act further to allow equal access to Alaska Native Veterans who served in the military or other armed services during the Viet Nam war. Alaska Natives have faithfully answered the call of duty when asked to serve in the armed services. In fact, American Indians and Alaska Natives generally have the highest record of answering the call to duty.

Under the Native Allotment Act, Alaska natives were allowed to apply for lands which they traditionally used as fish camps, berry picking camps or hunting camps. However, many of our Alaska natives answered the call to duty and served in the services during the Viet Nam war and were unable to apply for their native allotment. This provision allows them to apply for their native allotments and would expand the dates to include the full years of the Viet Nam war. The original dates recommended by the Administration only allowed the dates January 1, 1969 to December 31, 1971. Our Alaska Natives veterans should not be penalized for serving during the entire dates of the Viet Nam conflict. This provision corrects that inequity by expanding the dates to reflect all the years of the Viet Nam war—August 5, 1964 to May 7, 1975.

SECTION 8. ELIM NATIVE CORPORATION LAND RESTORATION

In 1917, the Norton Bay Reservation was established on 350,000 acres of land located on the north side of Norton Bay southeast of Nome, Alaska for the benefit of Alaska Natives who now reside in the village of Elim, Alaska. The purpose of the establishment of the reservation included providing a land, economic, subsistence, and resources base for the people of that area.

In 1929, through an Executive Order, 50,000 acres of land were deleted from the reservation with little consultation and certainly without the informed consent of the people who were to be most affected by such a deletion. After passage of ANCSA, only the remaining 300,000 acres of the original Reservation were conveyed to the Elim Native Corporation. This loss of land from the original Reservation has become over the years a festering wound to the people of Elim. It now needs to be healed through the restoration or replacement of the deleted fifty thousand acres of land to the Native Village Corporation authorized by ANCSA to hold such land.

As I am sure my colleagues will agree, the history of our nation reflects many examples of injustices to Native Americans. As hearings will confirm, this is one of those calls out to be sensibly remedied and can be with relative ease as outlined in this section of the bill.

Again, I am introducing this bill today to facilitate having its provisions circulated and reviewed during the August recess by the Department of the Interior, the State of Alaska and Alaska natives.

TRIBUTE TO THE U.S. ASIATIC FLEET AND U.S.S. TRINITY

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute the bravery and valor exhibited by the veterans of the U.S. Navy Asiatic Fleet.

From 1910 to 1942, the Asiatic Fleet protected American interests and promoted American ideals in the Far East. At the time, the fleet was comprised of 3 cruisers, 13 World War I vintage destroyers, 29 submarines and a small number of gunboats and patrol aircraft. Following the declaration of war against Imperial Japan, the outnumbered and outgunned Asiatic Fleet courageously fought against a vastly superior Japanese armada comprised of 10 carries, 28 cruisers, 113 destroyers, and 63 submarines.

The fleet participated in the first surface U.S. naval engagement of World War II. Fighting with little aircover, the brave men and women of the fleet fought against all odds, but in the end they suffered staggering losses. The fleet lost 22 ships, 1826 killed, and 518 POWs.

The U.S.S. Trinity was one of the few surviving ships.

From September 1 to September 4, the surviving U.S.S. Trinity crew and their families will hold a reunion in Chicagoland. Although I will not be able to join them, I wish them all the best as they gather together to fellowship, renew their friendships, and cherish the thoughts of their fallen comrades.

Protecting freedom and democracy has a price, and many of the brave Americans in the Asiatic Fleet paid the ultimate price. As Americans, we are truly blessed to have had so many extraordinary men and women serve in our armed forces. Their Sacrifices enables us to live in the world we live in today.

So let us not forget their deeds. Let us not forget their blood, sweat, and tears. Let us remember the sacrifices they made, so that we may live in freedom instead of tyranny.

I submit that the many untold stories of the Asiatic Fleet and the U.S.S. Trinity are all profiles of courage.

Mr. Speaker, I salute them all today.

SALUTE TO JUDIE SEDELL, DEPUTY PROBATION OFFICER OF THE YEAR

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, Judie Sedell of Simi Valley, California, says she just loves chasing criminals. She's good at it, too, which is one of the reasons this mother of two grown children recently was honored by the Ventura County Probation Agency as its Deputy Probation Officer of the Year.

Now in her 21st year as a probation officer, Judie not only is an exceptional probation officer, she is an exceptional person. Not only does she have the respect of her colleagues in the criminal justice system, she also has gained the admiration of her clients, even when they fail to stay on the right side of the law. In fact, Judie handles some of the highest-risk offenders, including rapists and armed robbers, and makes more arrests than any other officer in her unit.

Her success is due to hard work, a wonderful sense of humor and her ability to treat her clients with a combination of firmness, empathy, respect and dignity. She recently was observed joking with a convicted felon who had violated his probation. She gave him a candy bar, and, a short while later, told him he was under arrest. When she handcuffed him, he reacted calmly because he knew Judie was only doing her job because he had failed to do his.

Judie's supervisor describes her as a consummate team player, a role model for novice officers and a source of amazement for veterans who cannot figure out how she maintains her enthusiasm. A former social worker, Judie says she finds great satisfaction in protecting her community while helping felons to lead productive lives after being imprisoned. "It doesn't happen very often, but when you see someone's life turn around, it's an extremely rewarding experience," Judie recently told her local newspaper.

I am proud to say that Judie Sedell not only is an outstanding constituent, she and her husband Mike, Simi Valley's city manager, are also my friends. I urge my colleagues to join me in wishing her many more years of continued success.

MARV VALENTINE

HON. DAVE CAMP

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to draw the attention of my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives and my constituents in the 4th Congressional District to the distinguished career of a man I am proud to represent in Congress, Mr. Marv Valentine of Clare, Michigan.

Mr. Valentine is retiring after having dedicated 30 years of his life to Camp Rotary in Clare, and serving on the Lake Huron Council, Boy Scouts of America.

Through dedication, perseverance, and selflessness, Mr. Valentine and his wife, Justine, have built Camp Rotary into one of the finest scouting establishments in the Nation.

Scouting troops from the Midwest, and those from as far away as West Virginia, have experienced the wonder of Michigan's natural beauty at Camp Rotary. Located on 1,100 acres off Old Highway 27 in Clare, the camp is nestled in a woods of whispering white pines, next to a sparkling lake where deer and wild turkeys roam.

Besides serving as a home for scouts, Camp Rotary has also hosted football and band camps. Years ago, Mr. Valentine initiated an outdoor educational program for public and private schools.

Over three decades, more than 60,000 young people have learned new skills and made lifelong friends at Camp Rotary under Mr. Valentine's guiding hand and watchful eye.

On behalf of the campers and my constituents, I would like to thank him for his dedication to shaping so many lives and giving these young people priceless memories of their carefree days as a child at camp.

RECOGNIZING THE 25TH ANNIVERSARY OF SUE AND ED SMITH

HON. LYNN C. WOOLSEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, in 1972 Sue Weinreb and her three children Kara, Dana and David, and Edmund Smith and his three children, Corrie, Peter and Eddie moved to thirteen acres in Sonoma County, California to begin a life together. She was 29, he was 37. Together they had little money, no electricity, no running water, no house, and six kids between the ages of three and nine. Three boys and three girls. The original Brady Bunch. That summer they began the first of many do-it-yourself projects—building a home which would eventually take eight years to complete. Meanwhile, during that first year together, the 8 of them lived in a 24' trailer, a tent, and a Datsun, and took baths once a week at the neighbor's house down the road. Two years later, on June 29, 1974, they left the kids with a babysitter and snuck off to a rare weekend alone to get married. They planted eight redwood seedlings in the yard, to honor the new family.

In 1976 Sue and Ed started an environmental consulting business which they ran out of the barn. Over the next 12 years they grew the business into a full service analytical testing laboratory which employed 50 people in an 11,000 sq. ft. building in Santa Rosa. Other ventures followed. Meanwhile, they somehow managed to attend every one of their children's swimming meets, awards ceremonies, dance concerts, football games, and school plays. They made Halloween costumes and birthday crowns, helped with science fair projects, and joined in the wooden spoon duels in the kitchen. They volunteered when the community, built a playground, and they were involved in local politics. Because of their busy schedules, they made sure the family ate dinner together every night. And, they made sure to pass on their special interests to their children: sewing, woodworking, fishing, photography, science, art and travel.

Later, after the youngest had left home and they'd sold their business, they traveled to Africa, Australia, and Europe. No lazing around fancy hotels for them. Pictures show them kayaking with orca whales, riding donkeys, carving wooden masks, scuba diving, feeding giraffes and monkeys, and rock climbing.

This summer, Sue and Ed Smith will celebrate their 25th wedding anniversary with friends and family under those same eight redwood trees, which now tower over the house they built. Those 25 years haven't always been easy. There were especially terrible times—a separation, the death of Peter at age 28. But, there were especially joyous times—the births of their grandchildren Nick Smith Shafer and Scott Anderson Shafer (with their oldest son recently announcing that a third is on the way).

Sue and Ed's marriage is a testament to what can be created when a couple has a shared vision and a commitment to do whatever needs to be done to do the job right. They have always provided support for each other, their community, and their kids, to help, to listen, and to do.

Their greatest accomplishments thus far? The creation of a family, not without its strains and difficulties like all families, but a family where the grown children—now a teacher, a legislative assistant for a member of Congress, a stay-at-home mom/sex educator, an accountant with a fledgling business, and a lighting director/screenwriter—genuinely enjoy and care for each other and their parents. And, after 25 years of marriage, Sue and Ed Smith are truly best friends who treasure each other's company. They are a wonderful example of family values and an inspiration to all of us.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. DAVID D. PHELPS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 342, I was very surprised to discover that my vote for final passage of H.R. 2605, the Energy and Water Appropriations Act, was not recorded. I was definitely present for all the preceding votes on amendments and for final passage.

Although I do not understand why my vote on final passage was not recorded, I know I was present on July 27 and intended to vote for passage of H.R. 2605, The Energy and Water Appropriations Act, on Tuesday, July 27. Please let it be noted that I support The Energy and Water Appropriations Act, as amended. I would have voted in favor of passage.

A TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE LLOYD WELCH POGUE

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to wish The Honorable Lloyd Welch Pogue, a member of the Provincial Families of Maryland, who has resided in Maryland more than 60 years, a happy 100th-year birthday anniversary on 21 October 1999. I also wish to make special mention of his appointment by President Franklin D. Roosevelt as a Member and Chairman of the United States Civil Aeronautics Board. The USCAB rendered valuable services in the World War II program throughout the period of this Nation's involvement in that War. His professional career culminated in his being named Partner in a large law firm.

AMERICAN INVENTORS PROTECTION ACT OF 1999

SPEECH OF

HON. PATSY T. MINK

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 3, 1999

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to H.R. 1907, the American Inventors Protection Act of 1999. My position on this legislation is a result of my deep concern for the rights of those whom the bill claims to protect, the small, independent inventors whose ideas have revolutionized our country from its very inception. Along with these concerns, I object to the speed, secrecy, and convoluted method by which this bill has been slipped onto the floor late at night under suspension of the rules. The process by which H.R. 1907 comes to the House floor for a vote is an example in how not to proceed with a piece of legislation that not only attempts to constrain citizens' Constitutional rights, but has vital importance to our nation's economy in this era of furious, global competition in technology.

I find the manner with which this bill was brought to the House floor unacceptable. The fundamental right of a person to his or her intellectual property lies at stake in this situation. This is not a bill which should be passed without meaningful, in-depth investigation and debate. Far from a lengthy, informed process, H.R. 1907 make its way to this chamber following a slippery, silent path which featured name changes, number changes, unpublished documents, and finally, this evening, an unpublished bill, finished only minutes before being called up for approval. This is deplorable. Why must this bill be taken up in such a circuitous way? If it is a wonderful piece of legislation that protects the rights of the small inventor, why is it not open to more than the minimum debate and why can't we hold hearings on this final version, whose ink is not yet dry?

The Judiciary Committee marked up H.R. 1907 without the benefit of hearings; providing no public forum for the stakeholders involved. This stark omission comes despite extensive controversy surrounding this issue in the 105th Congress. There is no published committee report on H.R. 1907 and, until this evening, this House was scheduled to consider a patent bill almost half the length of H.R. 1907. I was expecting to debate H.R. 2654, and was shocked to find that H.R. 1907 was resurrected and had usurped its place. This is an appalling way to manage legislation embodying such an expansive scope and consequences.

H.R. 1907 provides for the publication of patent applications before the patent is granted if the inventor also applies for a patent in a foreign country. This leaves open the possibility that large companies may prey on the unprotected ideas of the small inventor between the time of publication and patent approval. This type of situation needs to be brought to a public forum, discussed among many members, not just the few speaking tonight. I am deeply distressed by this lack of opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, our nation's founders designed our society to be a land of unfettered opportunity where individual rights are zealously protected and elected officials considered future laws of the land in a public forum. Both of these ideals are jeopardized by this legislation. H.R. 1907 places at risk the right to enjoy the benefits generated by a person's ingenuity and innovative ideas. Without this right, we strangle the incentive for people to create and develop vital products and services which could improve our daily lives and bolster our economy. This subject matter deserves lengthy consideration, substantial debate, and open discussion, not a quick, suspension vote after a whirlwind visit to Committee.

IN TRIBUTE TO JERRY L. GLADDEN

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor my good friend Jerry L. Gladden, who will retire this month after 30 years, 1 month, 2 weeks and 6 days with the Rancho Simi Recreation and Park District.

For more than 20 years, Jerry has served as general manager for the district and clerk of the board, leading the district capably and efficiently through several financial crises as he continued to see that Simi Valley and Oak Park, California, has superb parks and recreational programs.

Jerry has contributed to the community in many other ways as well. He was president of the Simi Valley Noontime Lions Club from 1976 to 1977. Since 1979, he has been a member of the Simi Valley Rotary Club, for which he has chaired several committees. He is a former member of the Simi Valley Chamber of Commerce and served on the United Way Allocations Committee for seven years.

But Jerry's greatest legacy will be the recreational opportunities he created and maintained.

A general manager's greatest challenge is to keep his agency solvent. When money became tight, Jerry helped form the Rancho Simi Foundation, a non-profit organization with the responsibility of raising funds to help support recreation programs. He pushed for a continuing grant program, which has brought in more than $6.2 million to the Park District during the past 25 years. He is responsible for establishing a lease/operator concession program that generates more than $1 million for the district each year. He also found ways to cut insurance premiums for the district.

In addition, Jerry established a volunteer program with a core of more than 200 volunteers who clear trails, clean parks, perform clerical work and help run youth programs. He also established a fundraising program that has raised more than $40,000 in cash and gifts to help support special events for Simi Valley's youth.

Apparently he had too much time on his hands and accepted the position of chief administrative officer for the Rancho Simi Open Space Conservation Agency, a joint powers authority between the Park District and the City of Simi Valley. The agency manages Corriganville Park, an old-time movie ranch that was the model for present-day Universal Studios.

Not surprisingly, Jerry has won numerous awards for his hard work, dedication and success.

Jerry and his wife, Donna, have three children and four grandchildren. When time permits, he enjoys woodworking and restoring cars. He is also still learning to golf. It is unknown if more time on the greens will actually improve his game.

Mr. Speaker, I know my colleagues will join me in recognizing Jerry L. Gladden for his decades of dedicated service and in wishing him and his family Godspeed in his retirement. His dedication to recreational opportunities will be difficult for the Park District to replace.

JUDICIAL CORRUPTION IN ARGENTINA

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following testimony of Dr. Federico Westerkamp, founder of the Center for Legal and Social Studies.

JULY 22,1999.

To the members of Congress: Rep. TOM LANTOS, Rep. ERIC FALEOMAVAEGA, Rep. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

First of all, thank you very much for inviting me, as a founding member of the Center for Legal and Social Studies (CELS) of Buenos Aires, to act as a witness in this Members Briefing on Judicial Corruption in Argentina.

In my view, the judiciary of my country is in a delicate state. Charges of corruption have proliferated in the last years. Several judges are under legal processes although they move with the certain slowness. Various judges are currently under close scrutiny. Some of them are being submitted to the so called impeachment under the old system where the House of Representatives makes the accusation and the Senate decides if removal is fitting or not.

With few exceptions, mainly for ethical corruption, the system of impeachment failed and the new 1995 constitution replaced with the Council of the Magistracy, a method which just recently started. Many hopes have been placed on the new system, which in its first cases will show whether or not it will fulfill the hopes of the citizenry.

There are some courts which have being charged of prevarication, abuse of authority, bad fulfillment of the public functions and ideological falsehood. These are the most common charges against the bad judges, and we hope that the Council of Magistracies proceeds with decision and courage so that the new institution does not fail.

In the last decade one case has precisely demonstrated the three categories already mentioned and I do not hesitate signaling that it is the case of the three judges: Mariano Bergers, Roberto Murature and Julio Caesar Corvalan de la Colina, who have all acted as lower court judges in the case of the Buenos Aires Yoga School (BAYS). The case was initiated in December 1993 under the command of the first judge named above, storming the school headquarters and also various private properties of their members, and putting two distinguished ladies in prison without any proof of having committed any crime; on the contrary, all charges against the yoga school were unproved and all the noisy campaign of the court, full of false accusations and with lavishness of false information, created a sense of hysteria in the population of the country, which incredulous, did not know whether to believe or disbelieve the information from the judge, his secretary and various employees and chaperones.

The authorities of the Yoga School were threatened with imprisonment. Former judge Berges pronounced serious anti-Semitic expressions against the president of BAYS Dr. Percowicz, and several of his advisors wrote similar expressions on the walls during the searches.

As time passed and the facts appeared in the real image, many people—myself among them—realized that everything was a bluff, probably due to the ideological background of the court, and as the truth began to be revealed, the public began to disbelieve the charges against the whole Yoga school, including its students. Judge Berges opted for giving up the case, as he knew that the House Impeachment Committee was going to accuse him before the Senate, in order to remove him.

A new lower court judge, Roberto Murature took over; the campaign against the Yoga school was still promoted, but at this time it was obvious that the process was weakening, so the second judge was relieved of the case by a suspicious division in the court, and a the third judge took over.

The process has revealed that the charges against the Yoga school were promoted by three families whose daughters were suffering bad treatment before entering the Yoga school, from their mothers and fathers. (In the first case the woman was charged by her stepfather of showing strange behavior, that he ascribed to the Yoga School and its alleged "brain washing" by members of the school).

The stepfather, with his so called "expert" in cults Mr. Silletta started a virulent campaign against the Yoga School, through the media. Last March, the third judge started the second process against the yoga school (double jeopardy, "non bis in idem"), victimizing three women, Veronica Cane, Valeria Llamas, and Carla Paparella and under petition of their parent declared them mentally "incapable" without taking into consideration their psychiatric reports compulsorily ordered by the first judge Berges. The three women, hopeless, came to my home in order to ask me, as a well known human rights defender, for help.

That is the reason why I am here. I have tried to speak with Judge Corvalan de la Colina, and with the Secretary of the court, but it was useless, the judge never received myself nor the three women. It seems he is accustomed to ignoring the arguments of anyone who knows what is happening in his court.

This is why I have decided to present my testimony as a witness at this briefing, in order to protect the above mentioned women, and to carry over my experiences as a member and founder of human rights NGO's, such as the Assembly of Human Rights, The Center for Legal and Social Studies, and the Movement for Life and Peace.

Thank you very much Honorable Representatives.

A TRIBUTE TO CAPTAIN LOUIS "DEAK" CHILDRESS

HON. CALVIN M. DOOLEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. DOOLEY of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Captain Louis "Deak" Childress, who is leaving his post this month as the Commanding Officer of Naval Air Station Lemoore, in Lemoore, California. For the past three years, Captain Childress has dedicated himself to improving the quality of life of the Lemoore community and expanding the base's military capabilities.

Captain Childress began his Naval career in 1973. He has held numerous assignments, including flying the F–4 Phantom from the decks of the USS Nimitz and USS Forrestal in Oceana, Virginia, serving as an instructor pilot at NAS Miramar in San Diego, and serving in the Persian Gulf as Senior Naval Representative to COMUSNAVCENT's contingency planning cell in Dharhran, Saudi Arabia.

In March of 1995, he was promoted to his current rank of Captain, and reported as the Commanding Officer of Naval Air Station, Lemoore in July of 1996. While serving as Commanding Officer of the base, Childress has played a vital role in improving the facilities and quality of life at NAS Lemoore. Responding to the concerns of his sailors and pilots regarding living conditions on the base, Captain Childress facilitated visits to the base by members of the defense committees in Congress and high-level Navy officials. He has led efforts to build the base's infrastructure, which resulted in the 1998 announcement that five squadrons of the new F/A–18E/F Super Hornet Fighter aircraft will be based at Lemoore, bringing an additional 6,000 personnel to the base.

Captain Childress' continued efforts to improve conditions at the base is exemplified by the changes that have been made over the last three years under his leadership. Some of these accomplishments include his implementation of the innovative Regionalization Business Analysis, facility renovations in anticipation of the new F/A–18E/F program, and brand new housing facilities.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me today in congratulating Captain Childress for his devoted service to the Navy and the Lemoore community. He has distinguished himself as an innovative leader and dedicated Navy Captain. We wish him the best as he leaves Lemoore to continue his service to the Navy.

WILBUR "PONY" WILSON: AN ATHLETE'S FRIEND

HON. ROBERT E. ANDREWS

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that the Rutgers University-Camden community is informed about the passing of Wilbur "Pony" Wilson. Pony Wilson served the Rutgers-Camden campus as athletic director for almost 30 years. He passed away this past Saturday evening. Few will deny Pony's true legacy is his commitment to encouraging students to pursue their studies and their dreams. He believed that education, not sports, was the driving force for young men and women who competed in athletics at Rutgers-Camden.

In an interview prior to his retirement, Pony noted "What's most rewarding is that kids now—since the late 60's and early 70's—are graduating. When you talk about the percentage of the kids that played [sports], we had a high rate on the basketball teams who got their degrees."

To many, Pony was not only a colleague or a coach, he was a friend to professors and students alike who passed through the Rutgers-Camden campus. The current Athletic Director, Ed Cialella, who was Pony's first hire in 1969 when he joined the college as an Assistant Instructor of Physical Education, reflects, "We lost a friend of athletics, and an athlete's friend."

During his tenure at Rutgers-Camden, Pony developed the athletic department from a five-sport program—with no on-campus facilities and no women's teams—to one that boasts as many as 14 teams with ample competition for both genders. He was known throughout the NCAA Division III conference for his belief that education, not sports, was the priority of the men and women at Rutgers-Camden.

Pony believed that "student athletes are students first." On behalf of all those lives that Pony Wilson touched, I would like to convey my most sincere condolences to his family. May his unfailing commitment to university athletics and education continue to live on in every one of us.

SAN FRANCISCO BOARD OF SUPERVISORS ASKS BAY AREA RAPID TRANSIT (BART) TO AVOID STEEL PRODUCED BY STRIKE BREAKERS

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I invite my colleagues to join me in commending the Board of Supervisors of San Francisco for their adoption of a resolution, which was unanimously adopted on Monday, urging that Bay Area Rapid Transit (BART) refrain from purchasing steel rails produced by strikebreakers at Oregon Steel's Rocky Mountain Steel Mill in Pueblo, Colorado. This principled action reflects the Supervisors' deep concern for the safety of Bay Area public transport consumers, as well as their commitment to defending fair labor practices in San Francisco and across our nation.

The Rocky Mountain Steel Mill in Pueblo, Colorado, illegally replaced 1,100 striking steelworkers in 1997. This outrageous and illegal action is only the most recent in a long record of that company's reckless disregard for the welfare of its own employees. This rogue corporation has been charged by the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) with over 100 violations of federal laws, and has been found guilty by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) of 62 willful and serious health violations, resulting in the second largest OSHA fine in the history of the State of Colorado. Communities have both the right and the obligation to expect higher standards of conduct from the entities that do business with them.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the Supervisors' request that BART refuse to purchase rails for the San Francisco Airport expansion project from the Rocky Mountain Steel Mill. This vital transportation project cuts through the heart of my congressional district, and I strongly believe that the safety of my constituents should not be put at risk by the shoddy work of inexperienced strikebreakers and the corporate recklessness of Rocky Mountain's executives.

Since the decision to terminate its workforce eighteen months ago, Rocky Mountain Steel has reportedly encountered serious quality problems with its manufactured products. Under no circumstances should the well-being of BART's hundreds of thousands of regular commuters be jeopardized by this corporation's careless and irresponsible behavior.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud the initiative taken by the San Francisco Board of Supervisors to urge BART to end its purchases of Rocky Mountain Steel. The company's striking steelworkers deserve better, and the safety of Bay Area commuters demands no less.

TRIBUTE TO BARBARA AND JAY VINCENT

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute two very special individuals, Barbara and Jay Vincent of Richmond, California. Barbara and Jay each deserve recognition in their own right for the countless hours they have individually given to their community. From Barbara's leadership with the PTA, League of Women Voters and the Richmond Planning Commission, to Jay's involvement with the YMCA, Richmond Farmers' Market and the East Brother Light Station restoration, the Vincents' commitment has touched every corner of the City.

Yet, perhaps the greatest contribution Barbara and Jay have made to the future of Richmond is their tireless efforts to preserve our region's open space and natural resources. Long appreciating the beauty of the San Francisco Bay and its habitats, the Vincents have worked to ensure that the Richmond shoreline will continue to be accessible and enjoyed by generations to come. It is indeed fitting that the City of Richmond recently honored these efforts by dedicating the Barbara and Jay Vincent Park, a spectacular bayside site with sweeping vistas of San Francisco, the Golden Gate Bridge, Angel Island, and Mt. Tamalpais.

It has been my distinct honor and pleasure to know and work with the Vincents during my tenure in the U.S. Congress. Their personal dedication to community service has always been an exceptional source of inspiration. I know my colleagues join me today in celebrating their many accomplishments, and in expressing our deepest appreciation.

COLUMBINE HIGH SCHOOL

HON. THOMAS G. TANCREDO

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, today, I rise with a heavy heart, but a heart that is buoyed by thoughts of hope and inspiration. In a little over a week, the first day of school begins at Columbine High School in Littleton, Colorado, which is located in my district.

We can all remember the first day of school and the excitement that went along with it. The anticipation for the year ahead and what it would bring. The exhilarating feeling of seeing friends, joining new clubs and sports teams, and being a part of something special. I doubt that many of us would ever trade our experiences in high school for anything.

Tragically, more than 2,000 students will begin school at Columbine without twelve of their classmates, and one teacher. These individuals are not among them not because they have graduated and gone onto college or moved to another town and now attend another school. They are not pursuing passions such as being a Navy pilot, fishing, singing, playing football, traveling to France, acting, playing music, working as a missionary, playing volleyball, praying, or being a father. They are not with them, because they were the victims of a senseless and destructive act that took place April 20, 1999.

Among these students will be twenty-two individuals who were wounded during the events of April 20th and are hoping to return to school this year. These students and teachers face challenges in the coming days and beyond that no one should have to face in the future. Richard Castaldo, Sean Graves, Anne Marie Hochhalter, Lance Kirklin, Kasey Ruegsegger, Patrick Ireland, Mark Taylor, Jennifer Doyle, Makai Hall, Mark Kintgen, Nicole, Nowlen, Danny Steepleton, Brian Anderson, Stephen Austin Eubanks, Nicholas Foss, Joyce Jankowski, Adam Kyler, Stephanie Munson, Patricia Nielsen, Charles Simmons, Evan Todd, and Michael Johnson are strong enough to stand up and begin another chapter in their lives, a chapter that we will help them write by giving them every opportunity to have a year of safe and enjoyable memories. Three of the wounded, Valeen Schnurr, Lisa Kreutz, and Jeanna Park, received their diplomas last Spring, and have now begun the important step of continuing on with life after such a tragic event.

This tragedy has caused us as Americans to reevaluate and reflect on our own moral and social values and to reexamine the role that we play as parents, relatives, and family members in the lives of our nation's children. This tragedy has driven many of us to work to bring not only healing, but also a reformation of our way of life. Everyone who lives in America felt what happened to those students. The phrase, "it can't happen in my backyard" is now gone for the residents of the Sixth District.

I do, however, feel hope and inspiration today. I feel a sense of hope when I see and hear the determination and genuine concern that individuals have when discussing our schools and a desire to make them a safe and prosperous environment. I feel a great sense of inspiration in these students and teachers who are walking back through the same doors they ran out on April 20, 1999. In fact, as of August 2, no students had applied for a transfer from Columbine. We are witnessing real courage.

I ask that my colleagues in the United States Congress, any my fellow citizens, pray for the students of Columbine High School as they start a new year. Pray that the smiles of youth return to these students. Pray that we have the power and the faith to do our part to ensure that this horrible violation of innocence is never repeated again.

And, most of all, pray for the families of: Cassie Bernall, Steven Curnow, Corey DePooter, Kelly Fleming, Matthew Kechter, Daniel Mauser, Daniel Rohrbough, Rachel Scott, Isaiah Shoels, John Tomlin, Lauren Townsend, Kyle Velazques, and Dave Sanders, the twelve students and one teacher who will not be starting school this year.

HONORING ST. BARTHOLOMEW SCHOOL ON ITS 75TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. JOSEPH CROWLEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to honor the St. Bartholomew School in Elmhurst, Queens on the occasion of its 75th Anniversary.

St. Bartholomew has been in the forefront of providing a quality value-based education to the children of the community for three-quarters of a century. The School, the third largest Catholic parochial school in the entire Diocese of Brooklyn and Queens, currently has an enrollment of some 650 students and is accredited by the prestigious Middle States Association.

St. Bart's, as it is affectionately known, first opened its doors in 1923, and has since then been an integral and significant element in the life of the Elmhurst community. Elmhurst was recently identified in the September issue of National Geographic magazine as "Elmhurst 11373, the most ethnically diverse zip code in the United States." Affiliated with St. Bartholomew Roman Catholic Parish, St. Bart's School ably reflects that rich diversity of heritage in a most enthusiastic way, welcoming students of many religions and national origins to participate in its outstanding academic program.

In addition to a full schedule of academic subjects, students in all grades receive instruction in computer skills, physical education, and library science, and participate in a host of interesting and informative clubs and extracurricular activities. But most importantly, the religious and lay faculty cooperate in striving for the utmost creativity in education, emphasizing values and excellence in an atmosphere of healthy academic discipline.

Finally, I would like to commend Sister Augusta Conter, o.p., Principal, and Mr. Thomas Straczynski, Social Studies teacher and Chairman of the 75th Anniversary Committee, as well as all of the committee members whose tireless efforts made the anniversary and its many events a tremendous success.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in paying this 75th Anniversary tribute to a superb institution of learning and to the people who help make it all possible.

IN HONOR OF PRIVATE HARRY H. MARGOLIS

HON. JERROLD NADLER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, Pericles said, while speaking at a funeral for fallen soldiers, "If our country should appear great to you, remember that her glories were purchased by brave and valiant men, by men who knew their duty." I rise today to honor one such man, Private Harry H. Margolis. Pvt. Margolis was born on September 8, 1913, and died 30 years later in France during World War II. When he began his active service 10 months earlier, he left behind in New York his wife Isobel, their 17-month-old son Harvey, and his parents.

Many years later, Pvt. Margolis' son began to wonder if his father should have been awarded a medal for his sacrifice that day in 1944. His mother then called my office in response to her son's inquiry. Now, exactly 55 years and 1 day after Pvt. Margolis perished at the Battle of St. Louis, he has been awarded the Purple Heart. He has finally received the recognition he so richly deserves and his family can rest assured that the United States of America is deeply grateful for the life that was given in her name on July 11th, 1944. Such glorious gifts will never be forgotten.

HONORING THE ALBANIAN AMERICAN WOMEN'S ORGANIZATION

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor the Albanian American Women's Organization (AAWO), "Motrat Qiriazi." The AAWO is a nonprofit group committed to the advancement of Albanian Women within their families, communities, and society.

The Albanian American Women's Organization was founded in 1993 by a small group of Albanian immigrants in New York City. "Motrat Qiriazi" is named for sisters Qiriazi, the first Albanian women educators who dedicated their lives to the empowerment of Albanian women. The organization is composed entirely of volunteers and numbered more than 1,200 in 1998.

When the situation deteriorated in Kosova, the AAWO began to focus its attention on helping the people in crisis. In 1999, the AAWO raised $54,000 and developed strong ties with organizations like the International Rescue Committee. The leadership of the AAWO met with First Lady Hillary Clinton at the White House on August 2, 1999. They are currently involved in giving support to recent immigrants and refugees, including providing host families and job placement.

Once again, I offer my most heartfelt commendation to the AAWO for their hard work and commitment to helping people both in the United States and throughout the Balkans.

INTRODUCTION OF THE NEW MARKETS TAX CREDIT ACT OF 1999

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, today along with approximately 20 other Members, I am introducing legislation entitled the "New Markets Tax Credit Act of 1999." The legislation is designed to spur $6 billion of private sector equity investments in businesses located in low- and moderate-income rural and urban communities.

We should all be pleased with the economic growth that this country is experiencing. However, our current economic boom is not being enjoyed by all areas of the country. Many urban and rural low-income communities continue to have severe economic problems. Businesses in those areas often do not have access to the capital they need to grow and provide job opportunities for the residents of those areas. The residents of those areas lack access to basic businesses, such as grocery stores and other retail facilities, that all the rest of us take for granted.

Unfortunately, business investment capital tends to flow to those areas of our country that already are experiencing rapid economic growth. We need to develop policies to direct some of that business capital to low-income communities. I believe that targeted tax credits can play an important role in this area by enhancing the economic return to the investor. The low-income housing tax credit is a very good example of how targeted tax credits can direct capital to needed investments.

I am very pleased that the President's budget contains several proposals to promote efforts to attract business capital to low-income areas. The bill that we are introducing today is the tax portion of the President's proposal. He also has made other proposals designed to promote growth in emerging markets in this country, just as this Nation, through entities like the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, helps to promote growth in emerging markets overseas.

The President's budget proposals this year are a continuation of the efforts of this administration in community development. I am very pleased that we have been able to enact several important community development tax initiatives with the President's support. The Empowerment Zone and Enterprise Community tax incentives and the brownfields tax incentives are important tools in assisting community development. I believe that the bill we are introducing today is another important tool needed to expand economic opportunity to all areas of this country. I look forward to working with the President and Members of this House and the Senate in enacting this important initiative.

Following is a brief description of the bill:

DESCRIPTION OF THE NEW MARKETS TAX CREDIT PROPOSAL

The bill provides an annual nonrefundable credit to taxpayers who make qualified investments in selected community development entities. The amount of the annual credit is 6 percent of the amount of the investment and it is allowed for the taxable year in which the investment is made and the succeeding four taxable years. The credit is allowed to the taxpayer who made the original investment and to subsequent purchasers.

An investment in a community development entity would be eligible for the credit only if the Secretary of the Treasury certifies that the entity is a qualified community development entity and only if the entity uses the money it receives to make investments in active businesses in low-income communities. Low-income communities are communities with poverty rates of at least 20 percent or with median family income which does not exceed 80 percent of the statewide median family income (or in the case of urban areas, 80 percent of the greater of the metropolitan area median income or statewide median family income).

The Secretary of the Treasury would certify entities as being qualified community development entities if their primary mission is serving or providing investment capital to low-income communities and they maintain accountability to residents of the communities in which they make their investments.

The amount of investments eligible for the credit is limited to $1.2 billion for each of the years 2000 through 2004. The Secretary would allocate that limitation among the qualified community development entities.

ON THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF CLARENDON HILLS, ILLINOIS

HON. JUDY BIGGERT

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the community of Clarendon Hills, Illinois, as it commemorates its 75th anniversary. Clarendon Hills has accomplished much in the past 75 years, creating a congenial community that exemplifies the finest traditions and values of the American people. I, for one, take great pride in the legacy of Clarendon Hills and wish to share some of its history with you today.

The legacy of Clarendon Hills extends far beyond its 75-year history, and as all those who live in close-knit communities can appreciate, the strongest roots always run deepest. This town of nearly 7,000 originated from the far-sighted endeavors of ambitious men and women as early as the 1850's, seventy years before its incorporation as a village. Clarendon Hills emerged in progressive times, and the echoes of those times resonate today within the community.

Just as every New England town is centered around a church, every midwestern town is born of the railroad. As the railroad moved west of Chicago, men and women established Clarendon Hills as their home. They were people on the move, people looking to move westward, to create, and to progress.

Clarendon Hills was not simply "settled." It was nurtured and molded into the town we know today, one of the towns I am honored to represent in Congress as a Representative from the 13th District of Illinois. The earliest inhabitants did not wish merely to live on the land we now know as Clarendon Hills. They made the land their own not by tilling fields and cutting trees—though farming and lumber were two of Clarendon Hills' industries. Instead, this town's earliest residents fostered the sense of community we enjoy today by sowing fields and planting trees. Henry Middaugh, who arrived in 1854, did both. As streets were designed to wind with the controus of the land, Middaugh planted 11 miles of trees, which now support children's swings, shade our streets, and grace our homes.

Middaugh was also unintentionally responsible for the origin of Clarendon Hills Daisy Days. He ordered fine grass seed for his field and got daisies instead. Middaugh no doubt initially was disappointed, but, true to the spirit of those pioneers, he turned adversity into a blessing.

Clarendon Hills is a community that turns peat bogs into parklands—such as Prospect Park. It is a community that retains its small, locally owned businesses—with mom and pop stores as well as chain stores. It is a community that celebrates its distinctiveness together year-round—be it during the festive Christmas Walk in December or the carefree Daisy Days in July.

Those who call Clarendon Hills "home" are at once blessed with the atmosphere and fellowship of a small town and the vitality, creativity, and enthusiasm of a major city. It is the home of young and older families who live together, work together, and volunteer together. The best example of its public spirit comes at the Christmastime Lumanaria, where over 20,000 candles are lit, producing such brilliance that they are clearly seen from airplanes flying overheaded. People drive from distant communities to see this show of lights. The celebration, however, is more than just a display of civic pride. The town raises over $200,000 for the Chicago Infant Welfare Society through the sale of the candles.

And through it all, the Burlington Northern Railroad rushes by daily; and Henry Middaugh's mansion still overlooks the meandering shaded streets. Its been said that Middaugh would stand on his cupola and look out over the town. Were he to do so today, there is no doubt in my mind that he would be proud of what he would see.

As we observe the 75th anniversary of Clarendon Hills, let us remember where it began. Let us remember the many challenges and successes that formed its history. And finally, let us remember the progress of Clarendon Hills—its collective history and its shared future. This town's roots run deep, and I have no doubt that, like Middaugh's legendary daisies, Clarendon Hills will continue to grow and flourish for many years to come.

THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA FEDERAL JUDGESHIP ACT OF 1999

HON. RANDY "DUKE" CUNNINGHAM

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the Southern California Federal Judgeship Act of 1999. I am proud to be joined in this effort by my colleagues from San Diego, Rep RON PACKARD, Rep. DUNCAN HUNTER, and Rep. BRIAN BILBRAY. This important legislation will authorize four additional Federal district court judges, three permanent and one temporary, to the Southern District of California.

A recent judicial survey ranks the Southern District of California as the busiest court in the nation by Number of criminal felony cases filed and total number of weighted cases per judge. In 1998, the Southern District had a weighted caseload of 1,006 cases per judge. By comparison, the Central District of California had a weighted filing of 424 cases per judge; the Eastern District of California had a weighted filing of 601 cases per judge; and the Northern District of California had a weighted filing of 464 cases per judge.

The Southern District consists of the San Diego and Imperial Counties of California, and shares a 200-mile border with Mexico. According to the U.S. Customs Service, as much as 33 percent of the illegal drugs and 50 percent of the cocaine smuggled into the United States from Mexico enters through this court district. Additionally, the court faces a substantial number of our Nation's immigration cases. Further multiplying the district's caseload is an agreement between the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the State of California that calls for criminal aliens to be transferred to prison facilities in this district upon nearing the end of their State sentences. All these factors combine to create a tremendous need for additional district court judges.

I hope that all my colleagues will join those of us from San Diego and help the people of Southern California by authorizing additional district court judges for the Southern District of California.

"NAFTA"

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have printed in the RECORD this statement by Nicholas Trebat from the Council on Hemispheric Affairs. I am inserting this statement in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as I believe that the views of this man will benefit my colleagues.

CORPORATE SOVEREIGNTY

(By Nicholas Trebat)

RESEARCH ASSOCIATE, COUNCIL ON HEMISPHERIC AFFAIRS

Its critics argue that the recent dispute between the Methanex corporation and the U.S. government is a good illustration of how NAFTA principally serves the interests of the business sector even at the cost of the general public. This may be evident in the manner in which the treaty's Canadian, Mexican and American negotiators narrowly determined what constituted a "threat" to national sovereignty when the pact was forged in 1994. Granting corporations the power to challenge national laws and regulations that conflicted with their profit-making strategies was apparently never considered as posing a serious challenge to federal autonomy. Affirming labor rights, conversely, seems to have been perceived as tantamount to abdicating nationhood.

Methanex, based in Vancouver, Canada, is the world's largest producer of methanol, a key ingredient in the fuel additive MTBE. The chemical allows gas to burn more efficiently, but it also raises a potential hazard to the nation's water supplies. On July 27, the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) formally recommended that MTBE usage be heavily reduced.

Much to Methanex's chagrin, the EPA was simply reiterating findings previously reached by the state of California. Last spring, its regulators stunned the company by threatening to phase out the use of MTBE by 2002. Its scientists concluded that MTBE had contaminated municipal reservoirs throughout the state.

Methanex, however, may be able to overturn the ban on the product, or at least obtain substantial compensation (it is demanding nearly one billion dollars) if California is able to uphold its regulations. Chapter 11 of the NAFTA charter could conceivably be interpreted by friendly parties as giving the company the authority to do so, by stating that any "expropriation" of "investments," foreign or domestic, is unlawful and subject to severe punitive measures. Private corporations in the past have proven how malleable this NAFTA provision can be. The most outrageous incident involved the U.S.-based Ethyl corporation, which intimidated Ottawa into repealing a ban on the gas additive MMT, a substance proscribed in virtually every other country in the world.

Immediately following the Ethyl case, Canada, under the threat of a lawsuit from the American chemical-treatment company S.D. Myers, revoked a ban on the export of PCB-contaminated waste. In Mexico, another U.S. company, Metalclad, sued authorities for introducing a zoning plan that would force the corporation to relocate its waste disposal facility, even though the facility's original location endangered local water resources.

One might assume from these cases that the three NAFTA signatories no longer cherish their sovereignty. But this, as the history of the North American Agreement on Labor (NAALC) reveals, is only half true.

That accord, signed in 1994 as a "labor side" codicil to NAFTA, is awash in its concern for "national sovereignty." The agreement creates institutions that assess violations of labor rights in the NAFTA countries. Out of fear that these monitoring institutions would infringe upon domestic laws, they were given only "review and consultation" status, with no authority to adjudicate or even investigate individual cases.

It comes as no surprise, therefore, that of the 19 claims of labor violations brought forward for review under the NAALC, not one has resulted in a fine against the accused country. Contrast this with the five claims filed by corporations against NAFTA governments since 1996, which have resulted in one major fine and two revocations of federal health laws, with three of these cases still pending.

In assessing the implications of NAFTA's impact on "national sovereignty," one has to recognize the duplicity with which the trade pact's advocates have invoked this phrase. In the trade agreement, devised almost in its entirety by economists and business leaders, it is clear that the term, at least in operational terms, largely has been given short shrift. But in the NAALC charter, a commitment to "Affirming respect for each Party's constitution and law," is found.

This seeming doublespeak actually reveals with singular clarity that NAFTA was created primarily to initiate a gradual transfer of substantive authority from the public to the private sector. Therefore, NAFTA's and its labor side agreement's profound pro-corporate tilt should come as no surprise.

Perhaps it is for this reason that the Methanex case has provoked no thunderous ukases from the White House, nor press releases denouncing the lese majesté that private multinationals are raising against traditional federal and state autonomy. Let us hope that this silence does not persist, for not only are one billion dollars worth of taxpayer funds at stake, but, more importantly, the belief that the nation's laws should reflect the needs of its citizenry, and not only the immoderate demands of a few self-serving corporations.

GROUNDBREAKING OF CENTURY PARK IN ROMEOVILLE, ILLINOIS

HON. JUDY BIGGERT

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, amid debates about urban sprawl and highway widenings, and conflict over flight patterns and regional metropolitan planning authorities—in short, while struggling against all the demands that growth makes of us—it is altogether too easy to forget the lessons of a public commons.

Fortunately, it is not always so.

Later this month, I will have the pleasure to participate in the groundbreaking of a wonderful new park in one of the fastest growing communities in America.

Romeoville, Illinois, lies in one of the most vital centers of development anywhere. Industry, commerce and families are attracted to Romeoville. It is no wonder. The village is minutes away from major roadways and yet tightly bound in a spirit of cooperation and community.

Century Park will become the village's first new community park in 25 years. It will offer baseball and soccer fields, basketball courts, paths and playgrounds, picnic shelters and gazeboes, and an educational nature center.

Century Park's nature center will include an educational facility that will teach children about the environment. The parks of Romeoville, though teach even more. They show how important community is to the people of this village.

Though not a large city, Romeoville supports 17 parks and a large recreation center.

Two years ago, a unique Park Watch program was established. Now, working together with the park district, dozens of volunteers—including many teenagers—give time and money to help make sure their public commons remain safe and beautiful. They plant flowers, pick up garbage, even help cut the grass.

Families coming together as a community: That is what the people of Romeoville will celebrate—and the lesson they will teach—when they join to dig up the first dirt of their new public land.

I hope you will join me in congratulating the people and community ledaers of Romeoville as they break ground on Century Park.

A BILL TO AMEND THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1986 TO ESTABLISH FOR CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS A LIMITED ESTATE TAX CREDIT EQUIVALENT TO THE MARITAL DEDUCTION AND A PRO RATA UNIFIED CREDIT

HON. AMO HOUGHTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation to address a problem that exists for employees of the World Bank and other international organizations. This same legislation was introduced in the last three Congresses. I understand that the estate tax rules, as amended by the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 (TAMRA), are producing a serious and probably unintentional tax burden on certain employees of the World Bank and other international organizations.

The employees affected are those who are neither U.S. citizens nor permanent resident aliens, but who come to the United States temporarily for purposes of their employment at an international organization. In addition, nonresidents who are not U.S. citizens may also be affected. These individuals are normally exempt from U.S. individual income taxes.

The problem involves the restrictions on the use of a marital deduction in the estates of these individuals. These restrictions may result in an unwarranted U.S. estate tax burden because the individuals happen to die while in the United States, when their purpose for being here is employment with an international organization. This bill addresses these problems by providing for a limited marital transfer credit.

The bill would apply to a holder of a G–4 (international organization employee) visa on the date of death. Normally, a resident employee and the spouse would each be entitled to a unified estate and gift tax credit, which under current law is equivalent to an exemption of $650,000 or a total of $1,300,000. However, if the employee dies the spouse would normally return to the country of citizenship. In that case, the surviving spouse would not utilize his or her unified credit. The bill would provide for a limited marital transfer credit, which again would be the equivalent of $650,000. Thus, in a deceased employee's estate, there would be available the unified estate and gift tax credit for bequests to any beneficiaries selected by the decreased, as well as a maximum marital transfer credit equivalent to $650,000, the latter limited for use to marital transfers. A similar provision would apply to nonresident individuals who are not U.S. citizens; however, the unified credit equivalent of $60,000 would be submitted for the $650,000.

I believe this change would appropriately address the problem that currently exists. Support of my colleagues in enacting this important piece of legislation is welcomed.

TRIBUTE TO BRIGADIER GENERAL ROBERT ALLAN GLACEL

HON. IKE SKELTON

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate and pay tribute to Brigadier General Robert Allan Glacel, who will retire from the United States Army on September 30, 1999 after 30 years of exemplary service.

Brigadier General Glacel is the son of an Army Lieutenant Colonel who served in World War II and had a 22-year career in the U.S. Army. Brigadier General Glacel graduated from West Point in 1969 and was commissioned in the Field Artillery. After completing the Officer Basic Course and the Airborne and Ranger Courses, Brigadier General Glacel served as a forward observer and assistant executive officer with the 3rd Infantry Battalion, 319th Field Artillery, 173rd Airborne Brigade in the Republic of Vietnam. He than moved to the 3rd Infantry Division in Germany, serving as the Commander of B Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery; target acquisition platoon leader for the 3rd Infantry Division Artillery; and S–2 (Intelligence) of the 3rd Infantry Division Artillery.

Brigadier General Glacel served for three years in Alaska as Operations Officer and Executive Officer, 1st Battalion, 37th Field Artillery, 172nd Light Infantry Brigade (Separate). Additionally, he served as an assistant Professor of Engineering at the United States Military Academy and in the office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, Headquarters, Department of the Army.

In 1987, Brigadier General Glacel took command of the 1st Battalion, 4th Field Artillery, 2nd Infantry Division in the Republic of Korea, commanding the northern most Field Artillery site in South Korea and defending the Demilitarized Zone between North and South Korea. Brigadier General Glacel served as Political Military Planner in J–5 (Plans), the Joint Staff, Washington, D.C., where he was instrumental in the negotiations in Vienna, Austria, for the Conference for Security and Cooperation in Europe between the NATO, Warsaw Pact, and nonaligned countries.

In 1992, Brigadier General Glacel became the Division Artillery Commander for the 7th Infantry Division (Light) at Fort Ord, California. After inactivating that unit due to Congressionally mandated downsizing of the Army, Brigadier General Glacel served as Executive Officer to the Under Secretary of the Army in Washington, D.C.

He is responsible for all operational testing of Army equipment with particular emphasis on the Force XXI digitized Army, the backbone of our future force.

Brigadier General Glacel is a graduate of the United States Army Command and General Staff College and the Industrial College of the Armed Forces. He holds masters degrees in both civil and mechanical engineering from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology as well as a masters degree in business administration from Boston University. Mr. Speaker, Brigadier General Bob Glacel is the kind of officer that all soldiers strive to be. He has spent thirty years serving our country, mentoring young officers and soldiers, maintaining standards of excellence, and serving his country in an exemplary fashion. The U.S. Army is a better institution for his service. I know the Members of the House will join me in offering gratitude to Brigadier General Glacel and his family—his wife, Barbara, and his daughters, Jennifer, Sarah, and Ashley—for their service to our nation, and we wish them all the best in the years ahead.

IN CELEBRATION OF THE LIFE OF RICHARD J. CRONIN, SR.

HON. ROBERT A. WEYGAND

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. WEYGAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the memory of Richard J. Cronin, Sr., a distinguished Rhode Islander and close family friend to whom I owe a great deal. Richard was a model of the East Providence community and will be remembered by all as a dedicated, compassionate and selfless citizen.

During the course of our lives, we meet a handful of people who, we later realize, played integral roles in the development of our character. Richard Cronin was such a person in my life. My earliest memories of him date back to my childhood, when I would visit my grandparents in East Providence. Richard's family lived next door to them, and before long the Cronin family became as familiar to me as my own. While Richard and his wife Mildred chatted amiably with my grandparents, I would join the Cronin boys, Danny and Richard, in exploration of the neighborhood surrounding us.

I continued my contact with Richard throughout my professional career, and had the honor of serving with him on the East Providence Planning Board, of which he was a charter member and chairman. He retired from the board on May 20, 1980, with a distinguished record of service behind him. I succeeded him as chair of the Planning Board and drew on his example of honest and fair leadership to help me face this new challenge. Richard introduced me to the realm of public service, and I hope to maintain the high standards he expected of me and of those around him.

Richard wore many hats in the community and will be remembered for his numerous contributions. The owner of two businesses, Richard was a visible figure in the transportation and construction fields. He belonged to approximately a dozen trade organizations, and served as president of the Rhode Island Truck Owners Association and the New England Tank Truck Carriers. His community service was illustrated by his activity at St. Brendan Church and his status as board member of the East Providence Boys Club.

I attended Richard's memorial service last week and realized that all those present had been blessed by knowing this great man. He instilled in all of us a passion of life and a desire to improve ourselves and our surroundings. I will always consider him one of my mentors, the person who taught me the great joys and responsibilities of public service. I offer my most heartfelt sympathy to the family and friends that survived him and promise to honor his memory not only in words but also by striving to reach the high standards by which he lived his fruitful life.

DR. EDGAR WAYBURN, TRAILBLAZER

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, August 11, President Clinton will present Dr. Edgar Wayburn, longtime environmental activist in the San Francisco Bay Area, with the Presidential Medal of Freedom. The White House ceremony marks yet another milestone along the trail of a lifelong pursuit of environmental wisdom. In spotlighting Edgar Wayburn's achievements, the President is also underscoring the critical importance of environmental conservation in an era of scarce water, warming climates, sprawling populations, overcrowded parks, disintegrating habitats, and declining species.

Indeed, Dr. Wayburn, the honorary president-for-life of the Sierra Club, has devoted most of his 92 years to the goals of preserving the world's wild areas and enhancing the natural environment for the benefit of future generations. In following this trail, he has always marched in the company of this own extraordinary wit and humor—and in the company of his extraordinarily supportive wife, Peggy, a force of nature in her own right.

Even in the context of his long commitment to the environment, however, Alaska came to occupy a special place in Dr. Wayburn's world view. More than 30 years ago, he and Peggy visited the northernmost state for the first time. Alaska has literally never been the same since that visit. Dr. Wayburn and Peggy were so captivated by the glories of the Alaskan landscape that he has devoted a generous share of his life to preserving its majestic vistas, lofty mountains, and free-flowing rivers.

The national campaign that flowed from that first visit, and the hundreds of visits that followed, culminated successfully in the enactment of the Alaska Lands Act, which President Carter signed into law in 1980. It remains the largest public lands legislation in the history of the U.S. Congress. Everyone associated with that epochal event will readily grant Dr. Wayburn the lion's share of the credit for playing such a critical and essential role in protecting the vast and varied landscapes of Alaska. Today, some 104 million acres remain wild largely because of the epiphany that occurred during Dr. Wayburn's first trip to "the last frontier."

Not content with his heavy lifting on behalf of the Alaskan wilderness, Dr. Wayburn was simultaneously engaged in the struggle to create and expand Redwood National Park in Northern California. He worked closely with our former colleague, the late Philip Burton, who led the long struggle that eventually brought forth the eternal preservation of a pristine example of ancient forest.

Few of us living in Northern California at the time will soon forget the fractious debate that ricocheted through the streets of our communities and the halls of Congress. The noise grew most thunderous when the advocates of local jobs and forest preservation stood toe-to-toe in verbal slugfests. At all times during this difficult journey, Dr. Wayburn was steadfast in his recognition of the lasting importance of the inspiring redwoods. Today, these giants have a permanent home in a coastal habitat of 75,000 fog-shrouded acres. Redwood National Park is also listed as a UNESCO World Heritage Site and Biosphere Preserve and is visited by thousands of people every year from the United States and abroad.

In San Francisco, Dr. Wayburn demonstrated a similarly high standard of leadership in orchestrating the creation of Golden Gate National Recreation Area (GGNRA). As a result of Dr. Wayburn's visionary insights, an almost continuous greenbelt now stretches down the Pacific Coast from Pt. Reyes Seashore to Sweeney Ridge. In the 1960s the very notion of an urban national park was an alien concept to Congress and the National Park Service (NPS); but thanks to the tireless labors of Phil Burton and Dr. Wayburn along with the support of the local community and local environmentalists, GGNRA finally emerged in 1972 as a protected niche for a new kind of NPS administrative unit.

Today, GGNRA, with more than 22 million visitors annually, is the most visited site in the NPS system. Within its boundaries are redwood forests, beaches, dramatic headlands, marshes, abundant wildlife, historic forts, islands in the Bay, and a world-famous prison—and all of this incredible diversity lies within easy reach of one of the largest metropolitan populations in the United States. It exists today as a living testament to those who never give up on their dreams—and to the tenacity of Dr. Edgar Wayburn in particular.

Most recently, in February, Dr. Wayburn joined us in supporting the introduction of legislation to permanently fund the Land and Water Conservation Fund and to expand efforts to conserve open space, provide urban recreation and park opportunities, and protect marine wildlife. The bill, the Permanent Protection of America's Resources 2000 Act, would be the single largest annual commitment of funds to environmental protection in our history. It is a bi-partisan, albeit challenging, effort and Dr. Wayburn's support for the legislation is invaluable.

And now, at last, shortly before his 93rd birthday, Dr. Wayburn will be standing in the White House to receive one of the highest honors that our country can bestow. It is a tribute that is long overdue but richly deserved.

Dr. Wayburn, we thank you and salute you on this momentous occasion.

H.R. 2708 “CYBERTIPLINE REPORTING ACT”

HON. JUDY BIGGERT

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, there is growing evidence that individuals are using the Internet to trade and collect child pornography.

In my district alone, police in Naperville, Illinois have made over forty Internet-related sex arrests in the past eighteen months.

Although current law requires Internet companies like America Online to directly report to law enforcement incidences involving child pornography, the law is unclear as to which law enforcement agencies should receive these reports.

This amounts to a scattershot approach to attacking the problem.

What is needed is a central clearinghouse to ensure that all reports are acted upon swiftly.

Fortunately, such a clearinghouse already exists—it's called the CyberTipline. Created by Congress, the CyberTipline gives citizens a single location to which they may report child pornography cases.

Launched in 1998, the Tipline has received over 10,000 tips from the general public, leading to dozens of arrests.

I believe the Internet community should fully utilize this important public service. To that end, I have introduced H.R. 2708, which allows America Online and others to use the CyberTipline when reporting incidents of child pornography.

This bill has the support of law enforcement agencies, as well as the leading Internet trade association.

Mr. Speaker, the best way to protect the positive, unfettered use of the Internet is to ensure that it doesn't become a sanctuary for those who prey on children.

Requiring the use of the CyberTipline is a step in that direction.

I urge my colleagues to join me in the fight against child sexual exploitation on the Internet and support H.R. 2708.

THE TAUNTON RIVER

HON. JOHN JOSEPH MOAKLEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that would call for a 3-year study to determine if the Taunton River in Massachusetts could be added to the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System.

The Taunton River is of great historic, scenic, and ecological importance, not only to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, but also to the Nation. From a historical perspective, the Taunton River, which was formerly called the Great River, was the first river the Pilgrims encountered as they moved inland in the early 1600's. The river, which was already many thousands of years old, was also used as a travelway for Native Americans, who made canoes by carving out large pine logs. Within a few short years of the colonization, the river became an indispensable tool and lifeline for the Pilgrims. The river also served as a meeting spot for the initial contacts between Native Americans and the early European settlers. These meetings were documented through an inscription on Dighton Rock by Miguel Cortereal in 1511.

Mr. Speaker, besides the historical value, the Taunton River is also a tremendous ecological resource. The quality of the water is improving tremendously. Seven freshwater mussel species were found in the river, which is a record for Massachusetts. Striped bass and other types of fish have returned to the river. And what I find most incredible of all are the numerous spottings of the American Bald Eagle. Clearly the return of the American Bald Eagle is a sure sign of the remarkable example of the improved fisheries and pristine stretches of the river system.

Not only is the quality of the river improving, but the surrounding area is, as well. Years ago, the river was the site for many manufacturing factories that provided jobs for the residents of southeastern Massachusetts. Like many industrialized cities in Massachusetts, Taunton suffered an economic downturn in the sixties and seventies. But as a result of a concerted effort by the local community, the once blighted area was revitalized. Old buildings and warehouses were torn down, new charming street lights were installed, the facades on old buildings were refurbished, and a new riverfront park was developed. The revitalization of the area is a true economic success story, and the Taunton River is the centerpiece of this revitalization effort.

The local community deserves recognition for their outstanding dedication and commitment to protecting and preserving the valuable ecological resources of the Taunton River. It is with great pleasure that I call for a study to assess the feasibility of making the Taunton River a National Wild and Scenic River.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. GOODE. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, August 4, 1999, I mistakenly voted “aye” on House Amendment 394 (Roll No. 372) offered by Mr. SCOTT to the fiscal year 2000 Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations bill. I intended to vote “nay” on that amendment.

INTRODUCTION OF H.R. 2721 TO ENHANCE IMMIGRATION LAW FAIRNESS

HON. PATSY T. MINK

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced H.R. 2721, a bill to reduce the harsh consequences to legal aliens who have innocently voted and are now subject to being deported as a result.

Due to the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (IIRIRA), record numbers of aliens across America are being deported: Illegal entrants, visa overstays, and aliens who commit crimes, such as drug offenders and aggravated felons.

Swept into this dragnet are law-abiding, legal residents who made the mistake of believing they could vote, when they were not yet eligible.

IIRIRA makes legal aliens inadmissible and deportable if they violated any law, regulation or ordinance—at the federal, state, or local level-on voter eligibility.

Worse yet, this three-year-old law applies retroactively. Aliens who voted decades ago—even once—are being deported today. In my district is an elderly woman who has proudly voted for 20 years because she had no idea she was not allowed to. While processing her naturalization, INS asked her if she had voted as part of its routine screening. She proudly said "yes," and she is being deported this week.

Even some immigrants who INS has tested and fingerprinted and are deemed to be qualified to become U.S. citizens are being kicked out, simply because they voted before taking the oath. Imagine their shock at being told that they are being deported along with traitors, drug dealers and violent offenders.

I do not condone violating voter eligibility rules. Violators should not escape sanctions entirely. But deportation for voting in good faith (although erroneously) is an overly harsh punishment that does not fit the offense.

My bill amends the IIRIRA of 1996 to reduce the harsh consequences to these legal aliens. It does not change any voter eligibility law. It does not reduce the sanctions that already apply to aliens who vote without permission. All my bill does is ensure that an alien who voted in good faith, without criminal intent, will not be forced to pay the ultimate price of deportation or inadmissibility.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation to restore a sense of compassionate justice to our immigration laws.

IN HONOR OF STONEWALK AND CIVILIANS KILLED IN WAR

HON. JOHN W. OLVER

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. OLVER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor those civilians who have lost their lives because of war. When conflict erupts, too often civilians pay a bitter price. I rise in remembrance, so that the many women, men and children who have been forced to yield their lives are not forgotten.

But I am not the only one who has chosen to remember civilians killed in acts of war. I am joined today by a dedicated network of Peace Abbey volunteers, who have just concluded an historic journey from Sherborn, Massachusetts to Arlington National Cemetery in Washington, DC. This journey is called "Stonewalk," and judging from its name, it's clear that the volunteers did not arrive in Washington empty-handed. In fact, they managed to pull a 2000 pound memorial stone the entire way.

The success of this feat is a tribute to past and present victims of war. Stonewalk involved volunteers from nearly all of the Atlantic states. The journey lasted 33 days and covered roughly 480 miles. The one-tone stone is appropriately named the Memorial Stone for Unknown Civilians Killed in War. It will be presented as a gift to Arlington National Cemetery today, the fifty-fourth anniversary of the bombing of Hiroshima on August 6, 1945. Prior to Stonewalk, an identical memorial stone was unveiled by famed boxer Muhammad Ali and visited by over 5,000 people.

While the story behind this stone is courageous, the truth behind it is sad and bewildering. At this very moment, bloody conflicts around the world are costing hundreds, perhaps thousands, of civilian lives per day. The toll on victimized families in Kosova, Colombia, or Sierra Leone is no less painful than that placed on the many families here in the United States who have lost relatives to war. As a world and a nation, we have much work to do to resolve our conflicts peacefully, and to avoid the senseless death of civilians.

Mr. Speaker, I commend Peace Abbey for memorializing the civilians—the women, men and children—who have died throughout the history of war.

COMMEMORATING THE UNVEILING OF THE MILLENNIUM WALL

HON. JUDY BIGGERT

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to tell you about a celebration.

This is no ordinary get-together, though. It is Celebration 2000 and it will take place at the turn of the Millennium in what I must immodestly report is one of the most vibrant communities in America—Naperville, Illinois.

Celebration 2000 will be three days of fun for the people of Naperville. This event will honor the past, while it imagines the future. The activities include fireworks, parades, banquets, dancing, theater, music, spiritual gatherings, sports and games, writing and visual arts contests, and a torchwalk to recognize each of the past ten centuries. But what will heighten the joy of the event is the community spirit that is making it happen.

Naperville is the fastest growing city in America's heartland. Too often, such rapid change stretches and tears the fabric of a community. But not Naperville. This city has developed one of the liveliest downtowns you will find. It has nurtured a riverwalk that has been called the most beautiful mile-long stretch in Illinois. It has one of the best school systems anywhere. A national research group recently named Naperville as the best city in America in which to raise a child. It is truly a big city with a small town atmosphere.

As you can imagine, Celebration 2000 is a gala for, by and of the people of Naperville. Next month, the names of those who made the celebration a reality will be inscribed on a beautiful millennium labyrinth and wall. These will include Mayor George Pradel and Councilwoman Mary Ellingson, the remarkable cochairs of the Celebration 2000 committee.

Along with the Naperville Millennium Tower and Carillon, which I told this House about recently, these festivities will ring in the new year with the sounds of community, abundance and joy.

It is no wonder that the White House Millennium Council has designated Naperville as one of fewer than 20 cities in the entire nation as a model for others to follow.

For three days, the people of Naperville will rejoice in their blessings and generosity. I know you will join me in standing to wish them all the best of happiness.

WORKPLACE PRESERVATION ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. ROBERT A. BRADY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 3, 1999

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 987) to require the Secretary of Labor to wait for completion of a National Academy of Sciences study before promulgating a study or guideline on ergonomics:

Mr. BRADY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this measure and to all attempts to prevent America's workers from safer working conditions.

I am amazed by what I have heard in this debate today. First, I heard that this is not a partisan debate. It most certainly is—just check the vote totals once we're done.

Then, I heard that we can trust business to take care of its workers. If it did, we would not need collective bargaining—grievance procedures—or even the many studies the other side of the aisle keeps asking for. It is the unions in the workplace that take care of employees, not management.

Mr. Speaker, I know what I'm talking about. I came from the ranks of labor. Who was it that protected me when I was working on a scaffold? Who looked out for me to make sure I made an honest days pay for an honest day's work? It was the union, that's who!

Now, I also heard that Congress wants what is best for America's workers. If that's true, Congress should listen to the unions that were duly elected to represent those workers. They are totally opposed to this bill.

I urge my colleagues to listen to the workers voices and vote against this bill.

IN HONOR OF SHERIFF RICHARD ROTH

HON. PETER DEUTSCH

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. DEUTSCH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor the tremendous work of Sheriff Richard Roth. On July 26, Richard announced that he will retire after 35 remarkable years with the Monroe County Sheriff's Office. Sheriff Roth will be sorely missed by the South Florida law enforcement community, as Richard's resume is nothing sort of astonishing.

Originally beginning his career in 1965 as a radio dispatcher, Richard Roth has held countless positions in the Monroe County Sheriff's Office. Road patrol officer, detective, detective lieutenant, major—these are some of the many titles which Richard has held throughout his years of service. However, it wasn't until 1990 that he was named Sheriff to carry out the term of former Sheriff J. Allison DeFoor II. Since his appointment to the post in 1990, Richard has been re-elected twice.

Throughout his tenure as Sheriff, Richard Roth has accomplished much, including the reduction of the crime rate in the Florida Keys.

Sheriff Roth was also instrumental in implementing the "Smart Cop" program, a program in which deputies are assigned a particular area so that they can become acquainted with specific neighborhood problems and concerns. This is all part of Richard's tremendous desire to have the Sheriff's office closely tied to the community, so that the south Florida law enforcement community can best accommodate the citizens of Monroe County.

Though he will not be seeking re-election, Sheriff Roth's term is by no means over. One year before the qualifying race to fill his position begins, Richard aims to have the Sheriff's Office accredited. To accomplish this, the Monroe County Sheriff's Office will have to meet all of the standards set by the Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies and the Commission for Florida Law Enforcement Accreditation.

Mr. Speaker, the future looks especially bright for Richard Roth because he will have his family near him full time. He and his wife Sandra have already celebrated their 41st Anniversary, and they will be busy traveling through Europe after Richard's retirement. I wish to thank him for his tremendous work on behalf of the entire south Florida community, and I would like to extend my best wishes for the future as well.

TRIBUTE TO MR. JULIUS JOHNS OF JOHNSON, KANSAS

HON. JERRY MORAN

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. MORAN of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a man who positively affected the lives of many people. Last month Mr. Julius Johns of Johnson, KS, passed away. Julius fulfilled many important roles in his life—each of them with honesty, compassion, and common sense determination.

Julius proudly served his country. During World War II he was stationed in Australia as a member of the Army Air Corps 19th Bombardment group. Upon returning to the United States Julius was stationed at Pyote, TX, proceeded to earn an honorable discharge in October 1945.

Julius was an effective leader for Kansas Agriculture. For years he owned and successfully operated a family farm in Stanton County. In addition to his own operation, Julius found time to help his fellow agricultural producers. Julius first served on the Stanton County Agricultural Soil Conservation Service Committee. Later he was appointed chairman of the Kansas ASCS Committee, serving in that role for nine years. In that role, Julius was an advocate for the farmers of Kansas—always searching for ways to help producers achieve higher productivity and greater success.

Julius was a successful aviator and business owner. He was a licensed multi-engine airplane pilot and for several years managed Johns Piper Sales of Hutchinson and Johnson, KS. He was also a member of the Kansas Flying Farmers and International Flying Farmers.

Most important to Julius was his family. Over the course of 57 years he and his wife Millie raised two sons and devoted endless love and attention to two grandsons and four granddaughters.

Julius fulfilled many important roles in his life—each of them with honesty, compassion, and common sense determination. Today I join his many friends and admirers in extending my deepest sympathies to Millie and her family during their time of loss.

THE NUTRACEUTICAL RESEARCH AND EDUCATION ACT

HON. FRANK PALLONE, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, on August 4, the Food and Drug Administration held a public meeting regarding claims for dietary supplements under the Dietary Supplement Health and Education Act of 1994. The debate on that legislation was among one of the most memorable and widely supported legislative efforts of the 103rd Congress. It is my hope that the agency will thoroughly review the historical record of this debate and agree that regulatory policy should be implemented to allow truthful, non-misleading dissemination of health information.

The dietary supplement/functional food debate has always been one of access to products, and access to information. The debate on dietary supplements and functional foods continues with great vigor. The fundamental issues remain; the public wants safe and beneficial products and there is still, apparently, an ineffective regulatory structure. More work needs to be done in Congress regarding this aspect of health care.

In that spirit, I am announcing that upon return from the August recess, I will be introducing legislation entitled the Nutraceutical Research and Education Act.

The most important feature of this legislation will be its promotion of clinical research. The research will allow the public to get the right information on how to use dietary supplements and functional foods.

The goal of promoting clinical research is a non-partisan issue, and I look forward to working with my colleagues in the House to move this debate forward.

A LIFE WELL-LIVED IS A LIFE TO BE EMULATED

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, some may say that the secret of a good life is fame or fortune. But I believe that the secret of a good life lies in the essence of people like Mr. Duane M. Butzin, of Auburn, Michigan. For it is the spirit of Mr. Duane M. Butzin that will continue to be reflected in our communities and our neighborhoods, despite their departing this life for the greater one beyond, that will serve as an inspiration to all of us.

I join with Duane Butzin's family and friends in celebrating the life of this fine and upstanding citizen, who quite suddenly left this life as a young man of 63 years of age. In his short years, Mr. Butzin was an inspiration to all those who knew him and all who witnessed the manner in which the filled his life with good deeds, good-natured laughter, and the most genuine willingness to help anyone in need, whether it be family, friend, or simple acquaintance. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it is this type of individual, such as Mr. Butzin, who makes the State of Michigan such a pillar in the United States, and most assuredly, it is this type of individual who will remain the cornerstone of the future of our great country.

Mr. Butzin's faith in those around him is evidenced in his wonderful family and friends. He was the devoted husband to his beloved wife, Eleanor, as well as a loving father to his two daughters Terry and Debra. His grandchildren, Ashley, Adam, Mandi and Mariah were a great joy and source of pride. His brother, Gary, will most certainly miss his companionship, for Mr. Butzin found great solace from the outdoors, where he was an avid hunter and fisherman. His joy and delight with life are also evidenced with his appreciation of WWC wrestling. I join with his wife, children, grandchildren and brother in adding my voice to those who say Mr. Butzin's loss is a loss to all of us in the community.

Mr. Butzin's faith was well lived in his daily life and interactions with others. He was a member of St. Anthony's Catholic Church of Fisherville and was a strong voice within the Church, both through his participation in services and by his being a role model for parishioners.

Mr. Speaker, at a time when the world needs more kind-hearted, generous people like Mr. Butzin, it is our deepest sorrow to lose him at such a young age. However, his legacy is his wonderful, devoted family and his joy and celebration of life, which will continue to inspire all who knew him. Please join me in remembering and honoring Mr. Duane M. Butzin, and all that his life represents: integrity, honesty, devotion to his Church, and a deep and abiding love for his wife, Eleanor, and his family. He continues to serve as a role model to us all.

IN HONOR OF BILL DODDS-SCOTT

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to recognize one of my personal heroes, Bill Dodds-Scott. In doing so, I would like to honor this individual who, has given so much of himself to the people of Glenwood Springs, Colorado. When I was a young boy I was part of the Boy Scouts. At that time, Bill was the Scoutmaster.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, Bill has been the Scoutmaster in Glenwood Springs since 1955. Over that time he has had 47 young men earn the extremely prestigious rank of Eagle Scout. This is an amazing feat considering that on average, one out of every 100 boys that are part of the Boy Scouts becomes an Eagle Scout. Mr. Speaker, by no means is Bill slowing down. He believes that there are 3 or 4 more young men that may achieve the rank of Eagle Scout by the end of the year.

In addition to the honors that Mr. Dodds-Scott has received within the Boy Scouts of America, he has also earned the Adult Volunteer Humanitarian Service Award for Glenwood Springs.

Mr. Speaker, Bill is obviously respected and admired in Glenwood Springs. He has enhanced the lives of countless young men through his work as a Scoutmaster. He has been a leader, a teacher and a father figure to Troop 225. Many of the boys who have been guided by his wisdom have had their lives changed forever. While never achieving the rank of Eagle Scout myself, I can say that he has been a very big influence on my life and we are very grateful to have him as a member of the Garfield County community. Due to Mr. Dodds-Scott's dedicated service, Colorado is a better place.

THE BROWNFIELDS REMEDIATION WASTE ACT OF 1999

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, for several years, administration officials had said they needed and wanted targeted legislation to give them necessary flexibility to achieve clean up goals of the Resources Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA).

EPA has tried many times to address those needs as well through regulation. While those efforts have attempted to speed clean up and make requirements more rational, each attempt has met with legal challenges and protracted negotiations and lawsuits, severely limiting the Agency's ability to effectively address this concern. Moreover, with each attempt at moving in the direction of common-sense, the Agency is forced to pay fealty to broken statutory provisions that have inhibited Brownfields cleanups for 15 years.

Importantly, a 1997 General Accounting Office study confirmed this assessment: "EPA has concluded . . . the agency could not easily achieve comprehensive reform through the regulatory process. It believes that such reform can best be achieved by revising the underlying law to exempt governing remediation waste." GAO examined EPA's concerns and those of many other stakeholders and agreed with EPA's assessment.

The portion of the RCRA law that we are concerned with is that which directs cleanup of properties contaminated with hazardous waste. That portion affects far more than the more than 5000 "RCRA permitted sites" plus most of the Superfund sites. Indeed, the current RCRA cleanup program also affects many state cleanups, including those at "brownfields sites," brownfields are abandoned, idled or under-used industrial and commercial facilities where expansion or redevelopment is complicated by real or perceived environmental contamination. EPA estimates there may be as many as 450,000 of these sites. As brownfields redevelopment activities have increased, it has increasingly come to our attention that the hazardous waste management and permitting requirements under RCRA either preclude the development of some sites altogether or significantly increase the time and cost of redevelopment. In fact, EPA has stated that, ". . . RCRA requirements, written with end of pipe wastes in mind, may be unnecessarily burdensome when applied to brownfields cleanups."

Let's review some of the legislative record on this issue. First, the cleanup contractors who clearly want to see more remediation activity have stated "the environmental cleanup industry faces significant impediments to implementing innovative, cost-effective solutions due to the strict permitting, treatment and disposal requirements imposed by RCRA on remediation wastes."

The State agencies which run voluntary cleanup and brownfields programs have stated: "As State Waste Managers who administer the RCRA programs, we have long recognized the need for significant reforms to the procedures by which sites are cleaned up under RCRA. Contaminated media is currently regulated by RCRA to the same degree as the "as/generated/process wastes". This is inappropriate and often leads to many environmentally undesirable impacts such as a preference for leaving wastes in place rather than treating or removing the wastes and/or unnecessary delays due to permitting requirements."

EPA has written in 1997: "While the agency has not endorsed any specific regulatory proposal, we continued to believe reform to application of RCRA requirements to remediation waste, especially RCRA land disposal restrictions, minimum technology, and permitting requirements, if accomplished appropriately could significantly accelerate cleanup actions at Superfund, Brownfield, and RCRA Corrective Action sites without sacrificing protection of human health and the environment.

Just late last year, EPA had attempted one more time to provide some of the needed regulatory flexibility with the issuance of the Hazardous Waste Identification Rule (HWIR). We applaud the agency for those efforts. Unfortunately, that rule was litigated and is under settlement discussion. Remediation waste and newly generated wastes are completely different issues and should be treated differently.

Even if EPA's efforts at a settlement are successful and maintain the flexibility needed to encourage cleanup, it will take the agency over two years to implement the changes and even then the new rule would be subject to lawsuit—again introducing uncertainty. Furthermore, the HWIR did not address all of the issues that EPA itself admitted need to be addressed to remove barriers to cleanup.

I rise today to say that we have heard the concerns of those who want to cleanup those waste sites, but have been deterred by the barriers in the law. I am pleased to announce that Congressman Towns and I have introduced the Brownfields Remediation Waste Act of 1999. This reflects a bipartisan desire to help fix some of the problems posed by RCRA to increase the number of Brownfields cleanups.

Fundamentally, this bill allows EPA to treat remediation waste differently from generated process waste. This bill also clarifies and provides the authority for the so-called "corrective action management units," The EPA rules now in place are recognized as satisfying the requirements of this clarified authority, and any future regulatory changes will benefit from a EPA study of real world problems encountered while implementing these rules.

The bill also corrects some limitations by providing that staging piles and temporary units may be used at off-site locations, owned or operated by the persons engaged in remediation at the first location. This will be helpful in consolidating and managing wastes away from the urban sites where they are currently found.

A large part of the success of remediation waste management reform, including the EPA rules and this legislation, depends on the States assuming this authority and having the flexibility to tailor these authorities in connection with their own remediation programs; whether operated under RCRA or otherwise. This bill harnesses the innovation of these programs while requiring submission and approval of provisions implementing remediation waste requirements by EPA. EPA's current authorization, as it relates to remedy selection decisions in state programs themselves, would remain the same.

We look forward to bipartisan suggestions to improve this legislation and to doing our part to help those pursuing Brownfields and other remediation efforts.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO REAUTHORIZE THE CLEAN WATER STATE REVOLVING FUND

HON. SUE W. KELLY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mrs. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today for the purpose of introducing legislation to reauthorize one of our most important environmental infrastructure programs. The Clean Water State Revolving Fund (SRF) was created by Congress in 1987 to enhance the federal government's effort to achieve the Clean Water Act's objective of restoring and maintaining the integrity of our nation's waters. The program was enacted out of the need for a funding mechanism which allowed the federal government to be responsive to the nation's considerable wastewater infrastructure needs, and also afforded states a necessary degree of flexibility in addressing their own particular needs. Since implementing the SRF, Congress has appropriated nearly $16 billion to states, who in turn have been able to provide nearly $24 billion in loans for wastewater infrastructure maintenance and construction. The impact of this investment on the livability of our communities is immeasurable. In his testimony before the House Subcommittee on Water Resources and Environment, New York Governor George Pataki reflected on the benefits brought to his state by the SRF program, calling it "the most successful federally sponsored infrastructure financing program ever."

Mr. Speaker, the time is now that we act to ensure a stable federal funding source that attempts to reflect state and local needs. The authorization for this program expired in 1994, leaving it susceptible to the whims of the budget and appropriations process. As evidence of this, one need only look at the President's proposal for the SRF in the FY 2000 budget. If enacted, his proposal of $800 million would amount to a $550 million cut compared to the enacted FY 99 level of $1.35 billion. A significant cut such as this would be particularly problematic at a time when the need for this investment is enormous. The Environmental Protection Agency estimates that in the next 20 years the country faces wastewater infrastructure needs of more than $139.5 billion, a figure acknowledged by most to be a conservative estimate. These documented needs exist in rural and urban areas in every state. The expense to our environment and the taxpayers will only increase the longer we procrastinate in addressing these needs.

We need to demonstrate a strong commitment to safe and livable communities. I feel this legislation marks an important stride in this effort. I would like to thank my good friend and colleague, Representative ELLEN TAUSCHER of California, for her assistance on this legislation, and I certainly hope that our colleagues will join us in the effort to reauthorize the Clean Water State Revolving Fund.

THE BROWNFIELDS REMEDIATION WASTE ACT OF 1999

HON. MICHAEL G. OXLEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, today, along with Mr. TOWNS, the distinguished ranking member of the Subcommittee on Finance and Hazardous Materials, I am introducing H.R. XX the Brownfields Remediation Waste Act of 1999. This Act reflects a bipartisan effort that will do a number of things to improve the Nations' cleanup program and, most important, remove barriers and disincentives that have been problems for Brownfields and voluntary cleanup programs in all States.

These problems were not fully understood or thought through when Congress passed the 1984 Amendments to the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA). We should not let broken legislation stand in the way of remediation activities. Overall, the bill will remove barriers and disincentives and tap the expertise of EPA and state programs to tailor effective solutions without the straightjacket that has inhibited actions for 15 years. We have worked on this bill with the input of State agencies and the cleanup contractors, both of whom want to see more remediation activity.

The brownfields problems has many sources and many proposals to help bring new life to these areas. Brownfields, loosely defined as abandoned or underutilized former industrial properties where actual or potential environmental contamination hinders redevelopment or prevents it altogether. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency ("EPA") estimates that there may be as many as 450,000 such sites nationwide.

This epidemic poses continuing risks to human health and the environment, erodes States and local tax bases, hinders job growth, and allows existing infrastructure to go to waste. Moreover, the reluctance to redevelop brownfields has led developers to undeveloped "greenfields," which do not pose any risk of liability. Development in these areas contributes to suburban sprawl, and eliminates future recreation and agricultural uses.

In the view of many, Federal law itself can be a culprit. The fundamental flaw in RCRA that hinders cleanup is that the law was primarily designed to regulate process wastes, not cleanup wastes. As a result, the law requires stringent treatment standards, usually based on combustion, for most wastestreams; establishes lengthy permit requirements; and otherwise presumes that process wastes are continuously generated and disposed of at an ongoing manufacturing facility. RCRA's requirements are awkward, expensive, and hinder and prevent cleanup.

EPA has stated: ". . . EPA has long believed that changes in the application of certain RCRA requirements to remediation waste are appropriate. While the Agency has not endorsed any specific legislative proposal, we continue to believe reform to application of RCRA requirements to remediation waste, especially RCRA land disposal restrictions, minimum technology, and permitting requirement if accomplished appropriately, could significantly accelerate cleanup actions at Superfund, Brownfield, and RCRA Corrective Action sites without sacrificing protection of human health and the environment."—Letter from Michael Shapiro, Director, Office of Solid Waste, U.S. EPA to Doug MacMillan, Executive Director, Environmental Technology Council dated January 27, 1997.

"Perhaps the largest expense of RCRA is the enormous cleanup costs associated with the corrective action program. Although the RCRA corrective action cleanups could have been limited to address failures of the RCRA prevention program for as-generated wastes, Congress drafted the statute more broadly to capture old, historic wastes as well. RCRA corrective action and closures, state cleanups, CERCLA actions and voluntary cleanups often involve one-time management of large quantities of wastes. Under RCRA, management of these wastes may trigger obligations to comply with RCRA procedural and substantive requirements. For example, RCRA permits may be required for voluntary cleanups or state cleanups. Obviously this could seriously delay cleanups and dramatically increase their costs.

In addition, RCRA substantive standards are designed primarily for wastes generated from ongoing industrial processes and may not fit well in remedial situations. For example, requirements for pretreatment of cleanup wastes may foreclose other cost-effective yet protective cleanup options. . . ."—Don Clay, Assistant Administrator U.S. EPA before the House Committee on Transportation, March 10, 1992.

State cleanup agencies have also noted these problems: "At some voluntary sites, onsite management of contaminated soils triggers the application of RCRA management requirements. While volunteers should use best management practices and comply with RCRA for offsite management of soil, meeting RCRA requirements onsite only serves to increase costs without providing any commensurate benefits to the cleanup."—Don Schregardus, Director Ohio, EPA, February 14, 1997.

". . . The objectives for site cleanups versus ongoing hazardous waste management differ markedly. The RCRA Subtitle C hazardous waste regulatory framework is designed to ensure the long-term safe management and disposal of as-generated hazardous wastes (sometimes termed "Process wastes"). RCRA Subtitle C is a prevention-oriented program containing many detailed procedural (permitting) and substantive requirements (land disposal restrictions and minimum technology requirements). Conversely, the objective of site cleanups is to achieve an effective, environmentally protective solution to existing contaminated sites. For this reason, application of RCRA Subtitle C requirements to wastes that have already been released to the environment (i.e. contaminated media) can, in many cases, increase costs and delay site remediation efforts without significant environmental benefit."—Catherine Sharp, Environmental Programs Administrator, Waste Management Division, Oklahoma department of Environmental Quality, on behalf of the Association of State and Territorial Waste Management Officials before the House Committee on Commerce Transportation and Hazardous Materials on, July 20, 1995.

Indeed, State cleanup agencies have asked to make this legislation a priority and the legislation builds and principles adopted by the National Governors Association.

Cleanup contractors have also asked us to pursue this legislation: "The Hazardous Waste Action Coalition (HWAC) the association of leading engineering, science and construction firms practicing in multimedia environmental management and remediation, strongly encourages [Congress] to make RCRA legislative reform a top priority . . . to [produce] a sound bipartisan approach to removing impediments under RCRA. . . . For example, RCRA's land disposal restriction requirements can completely eliminate many technically practicable remedies from even being considered. HWAC strongly believes that only legislative reform of RCRA [will] remove this and other disincentives to cleanup of RCRA contaminated waste sites."—Letter from the Hazardous Waste Action Coalition dated January 6, 1998.

Clearly the Brownfields Remediation Waste Act of 1999 addresses a real set of problems. The bill is tailored to do a number of things to address these problems. First, the bill provides EPA new authority to tailor regulations for the management of remediation wastes from brownfields, voluntary, State and other site cleanups without applying the often rigid and inappropriate regulations designed for newly generated process waste—thus, allowing EPA to remove barriers to fast and efficient cleanups. Second, the Act shields EPA's recent common-sense regulations concerning remediation wastes from unnecessary and disruptive litigation. Third, the bill will provide needed flexibility for offsite remediation waste management units. Finally, the Act allows State programs, subject to EPA review and approval, to run protective remediation waste programs tailored to their brownfields, voluntary response or other programs.

Mr. TOWNS and I are interested in all bipartisan suggestions for improvement and seek your support.

THE AMERICA'S PRIVATE INVESTMENT COMPANIES ACT

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, today, on behalf of myself and a number of House Members, I plan to introduce the America's Private Investment Companies Act. This legislation, also known as APIC, is part of the Administration's broader New Markets Initiative, which includes separate legislation to provide tax credits for investments in APIC's and other community development entities, and to expand small business lending in low- and moderate-income communities.

After seven years of strong economic growth and job creation, the unfortunate truth is that many urban areas, mid-sized cities, and rural areas are not fully participating in our economic prosperity. Despite strong income and wage growth for many Americans, millions of Americans still don't have access to jobs which pay decent wages. APIC is designed to harness the private sector to revitalize distressed low-income communities, and to create jobs and economic opportunities for those individuals who are being left behind.

Under the bill, the Secretary of HUD is authorized to licensing a number of newly created America's Private Investment Companies [called APIC's] each year, and to guarantee debt for these APIC's. In turn, these newly created APIC's will be required to invest substantially all of the funds raised through such debt in businesses operating in low-income communities.

In order to be eligible for APIC certification and for federal loan guarantees, an applicant must be a for-profit community development entity, which must have a primary mission of serving or providing investment capital for low-income communities or low-income persons, and which must maintain accountability to residents of low-income communities. The applicant must have a minimum of $25 million in equity capital available to it. Finally, the applicant must have a statement of public purpose, with goals that at least include making qualified investments in low-income communities, creating jobs that pay decent wages to residents in low-income communities, and involving community-based organizations and residents.

Under the legislation, HUD is authorized to guarantee $1 billion in debt each year for the next five years for an estimated ten to fifteen new APIC's each year. For every $2 of debt that the government guarantees for an individual APIC, that APIC must have at least $1 in equity capital, which is at risk of loss ahead of the federal guarantee. As a result, at $7.5 billion in additional low-income community investments will be generated over the next five years. Yet, the cost of the combined credit subsidy and administrative cost is only $37 million a year.

Substantially all of the funds from guaranteed debt, plus required equity, must be used to make investments in "qualified low-income investments"—that is, in equity investments in or loans to "qualified active businesses" located in "low-income communities"

A "qualified active business" is a business or trade, of which at least 50% of gross income must come from activities in "low-income communities," of which a substantial portion of any tangible property must be in low-income communities, and of which a substantial portion of employee services must be performed in low-income communities"

Low-income communities are census tracts with either poverty rates of at least 20%, or with median family income that does not exceed 80% of the greater of the metropolitan area median family or the statewide median family income.

At a time when Congress seems eager to enact tax breaks and loan guarantees for a broad range of industries, it is not too to ask for limited resources targeted to corporations which invest in distressed communities and low-income individuals. I urge the House to hold hearings on this legislation, and to move towards its enactment.

FOREIGN TRUCK SAFETY ACT

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight in opposition to NAFTA's provisions to expand Mexican trucking privileges into the United States, and to introduce the Foreign Truck Safety Act, legislation that will mandate inspection of all foreign trucks at our southern border.

When we debated NAFTA in 1993, supporters claimed that NAFTA would not harm workers here or in Mexico, and would not harm the environment. Unfortunately, they were wrong. This treaty has sent thousand of good American jobs south of the border. It has also subjected that border to increased pollution of the air, water and land.

These are the most prominent promises broken by NAFTA. But we are about to add to the list. This Administration, under terms of NAFTA, is considering opening up all of America to Mexican trucks as of January 1, 2000.

What will the entrance of Mexican trucks mean for America? It will generate more pollution and increase the loss of good paying jobs. Most seriously, it will threaten the lives of qualified American drivers who will be forced to share the road with unqualified foreign drivers, who, as evidence proves, are driving unsafe, pollution-belching trucks.

U.S. inspectors, some operating just during the weekday hours of 9:00 am to 5:00 pm, have found that almost 50% of inspected Mexican trucks have been ordered to undergo immediate service for safety problems. This is based on the results of the few inspections of foreign trucks already allowed to enter a commercial zone in the U.S. In reality, hordes of uninspected foreign trucks cross various border points after 5 pm, before 9 am, and on the weekends. Accordingly, the Department of Transportation's Inspector General has already concluded that the DOT does not have a consistent enforcement program to provide reasonable assurance of the safety of trucks entering the United States. How could this Administration suggest expanding border-trucking privileges when we cannot regulate the current privileges we offer?

Unsafe trucks are not only appearing in the four border-states. But as the map here shows, reports of dangerous trucks have come from at least 24 additional states. From Washington to Illinois to New York, the entire country is at risk. That is why I am introducing the Foreign Truck Safety Act, because it will require mandatory safety inspections on all trucks crossing into the U.S. from Mexico. As of January 2, 2000, the Foreign Truck Safety Act will authorize the border states to impose and collect fees on trucks to cover the cost of these inspections. By requiring all trucks to pass inspections before entering the United States, we can help to limit the risks these unsafe trucks pose to our citizens. This country entered into NAFTA in order to better the lives of our citizens. Without this legislation, we will simply put our citizens in more jeopardy.

I think people are more important than profit, and I am concerned about the thousands of unsafe Mexican trucks rumbling down our highways and byways. Average Americans are already fearful about driving next to large, safe U.S. trucks that pass inspections; imagine their fear when unsafe Mexican trucks hit our streets, roads, and superhighways.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to stand up for Americans. Therefore, I urge all of my colleagues to work with me to pass the Foreign Truck Safety Act so that Americans will never be afraid to drive down Main Street, U.S.A.

NATIONAL WEATHER SERVICE WINS SMITHSONIAN AWARD

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the accomplishment of the National Weather Service, part of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA), in receiving a Computerworld Smithsonian Award for outstanding work in new information technology systems. The Weather Service's Advanced Weather Interactive Processing System (AWIPS) recently received the award, which honors the use of information technology to create positive social and economic change. AWIPS was the only federal award winner: Most of the other nine categories were won by some of our nation's premier corporations.

The new AWIPS system, which is now in National Weather Service field offices throughout the country, has already paid big dividends, most recently in saving lives during the devastating tornado outbreak of May 3–4 of this year, which swept through portions of 5 states.

AWIPS technology gives Weather Service forecasters access to satellite imagery, Doppler radar data, automated weather observations and computer-generated numerical forecasts, all in one computer workstation. On May 3–4, more than 70 tornadoes were pounding the U.S. between Texas and South Dakota, with particularly severe damage in Oklahoma. The AWIPS system in the Weather Service Office in Oklahoma City enabled forecasters to simultaneously track and issue warnings for dozens of tornadoes that were tracking through the area. A highly informed public, and good cooperation with the media and with state and local officials in the area, reduced greatly the numbers of deaths that might have occurred in this still-tragic event.

The AWIPS system will continue to yield new and improved warning and forecast services to enhance safety and improve people's lives. The modern National Weather Service is a good investment of tax dollars and will be an engine of economic gain in many weather-sensitive business sectors. For an investment that costs each American about $4 per year, today's Weather Service issues more than 734,000 weather forecasts and 850,000 river and flood forecasts, in addition to roughly 45,000 potentially life-saving severe weather warnings annually. Statistics show overall improvements in forecast accuracy and in timeliness of severe weather and flood warnings. Skilled NOAA professionals, working with AWIPS and other technologies such as Doppler radar, surface observation systems and weather satellites, make this possible.

Mr. Speaker, as Ranking Member of the Science Subcommittee on Energy and Environment, which oversees NOAA programs, I am pleased to share with my colleagues the news of this award celebrating one of the many accomplishments of the National Weather Service.

CELEBRATING A CAREER OF ACCOMPLISHMENT

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, when a fine and upstanding man such as Mr. William R. Wittbrodt of Mildland, MI decides to retire after a long and distinguished career, then we must send our congratulations to his family and our commiserations to his employer. So I join with all of his colleagues in saying that "Bill" Wittbrodt's dedication to the work of the United States Steelworkers of America will become that of legend, as has his dedication to his wonderful family. We can only surmise that the value of his efforts will continue to appreciate during his retirement.

Mr. Wittbrodt began his contributions to society with service in our Armed Forces, with his enlistment in the Air Force in 1947, where he served four years, including his service in Korea. Mr. Wittbrodt returned to his native Midland afterwards, and upon joining Dow Chemical, became a member of Local 12075, District 50, United Mine Workers. Thus, his long devotion and service on behalf of Local 12075 was begun.

Without Mr. Wittbrodt's meticulous stewardship and great dedication to Local 12075, the local union would not have been so successful and so committed to the rights of fellow members. Mr. Wittbrodt's leadership was evidenced early; in 1954 he became the Elected Shop Steward, 5 years later he was elected full-time Chief Steward, and in 1965 he was elected to the Local Union 12075 Bargaining Committee. In 1969 he achieved a well-deserved pinnacle of his commitment: the Presidency of Local 12075.

Mr. Wittbrodt's success as President was so evident that he was elected to four consecutive terms, and, while President, shepherded Local 12075's merging with the United Steelworkers of America in August 1972. In unparalleled support, Mr. Wittbrodt became Staff Representative to the United Steelworkers of America, and finally, this caring and devoted man became Sub-District Director, District 29 of the United Steelworkers of America in 1983.

Mr. Speaker, I have spoken at length of Mr. Wittbrodt's great contributions to the people of Michigan. But of equal importance is his great devotion to his wife of thirty-five years, Leona, and his grandchildren Merrit, Chad, Denise, Adam, Tyler and Jason, as well as his beloved great-grandchildren Jay Richard, Haley Marie and Lauren. It can be no understatement that Mr. Wittbrodt will be sorely missed by the people of Michigan he served in his distinguished career, and I join with them in expressing my deep and abiding appreciation to Mr. Wittbrodt in this first year of his retirement.

As Bill Wittbrodt enters retirement, I urge you, Mr. Speaker, and all of our colleagues to join me in congratulating him for his distinguished career, and in wishing him and his wonderful family many happy years to come.

WEST COAST LABOR AGREEMENT

HON. NORMAN D. DICKS

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of my colleagues a highly significant but largely unnoticed development—the recently agreed-upon labor pact affecting West Coast dock workers and clerks. At 5 p.m. on July 1st, with a news blackout in effect, the West Coast longshore contract expired. From early May until mid-July, officials of the Pacific Maritime Association representing roughly 100 companies on the West Coast, and representatives of the International Longshore and Warehouse Union (ILWU) met to try to hammer out a new agreement. After several days of complex, difficult negotiations—frequently lasting through the night—the two sides reached agreement several days ago. Last week, more than 99 percent of the delegates to the ILWU caucus recommended approval of the new three-year pact. It is expected that before the end of August this agreement will be fully ratified and that West Coast ports will enjoy 3 years of stability.

Besides raising wage and pension benefits the new agreement, among other things, calls for companies and union members to form a committee to discuss the introduction of new technology on the waterfront, or improve the use of current technology, to enhance productivity. This would seem to be crucial for all concerned. Canadian and Mexican ports and companies are rapidly moving forward trying to outcompete the United States for an increasing share of trade with Asia. It is in the interest of neither management nor labor to let this happen.

In a recent article in the Los Angeles Times, Professor Stephen Cohen, Co-Director of the Berkeley Roundtable on International Economy, and John Wilson, the former Chief Economist at the Bank of America and now a Senior Fellow at the Roundtable, noted that in the pat twenty years waterborne trade through West Coast ports has grown from $61 billion to an estimated $285 billion for this year. This is double the rate of increase in total US trade growth and this West Coast waterborne trade is clearly critical to America's continuing economic prosperity. Further, that trade, according to Cohen and Wilson, now constitutes more than 60 percent of the gross state product of my state of Washington and more than 35 percent of California's GSP.

If PMA and the ILWU had not reached agreement and there had been a West Coast dock strike or lockout, the dislocations would have been felt even more strongly in Asia than here. As Cohen and Wilson have noted: Asian exports arriving by ship at West Coast ports are expected to exceed $200 billion this year. This is the principal source of the vital foreign exchange net earnings needed to sustain the currency values, to service large foreign debts and to import the components and machinery required for growth and development of the stricken Asian economies. A significant disruption of West Coast ports would hamper recovery. It might also affect financial markets.

Mr. President, my constituents in Washington State and all Americans have a stake in this pact and in assuring that US-Asian trade continues to grow in coming years. None of us should lose sight of this reality. I am submitting for the RECORD a copy of the Cohen-Wilson article and a related article by Dan Weikel of The Los Angeles Times.

METRO—PORT STRIKE WOULD HURT U.S., ASIA

(By Stephen S. Cohen and John O. Wilson)

Despite six weeks of negotiations, the International Longshore and Warehouse Union and the Pacific Maritime Assoc., which represents almost 100 West Coast shipping lines, have failed to reach an agreement for a new contract for the West Coast. Since the prior contract expired on July 1, many union work actions have affected port operations up and down the coast. A full-fledged strike would put the U.S. and many other economies at great risk.

In the last few weeks, crane drivers walked off the job for two days in Oakland, effectively shutting down one of the nation's busiest ports. Work slowdown also have impacted the flow of goods through the behemoth ports of Los Angeles and Long Beach. Ports in the Pacific Northwest are experiencing slowdowns as well.

A West Coast port shutdown could trigger a reaction in international financial markets, with the biggest risk being a worsening of the Asian financial and economic crisis. There would also be a major national economic impact, a 20-day strike at ports in California, Oregon and Washington, for example, could cost this country close to $40 billion and 200,000 jobs. The impact of such a shutdown would increase daily across the country and even could trigger a sudden spike in American consumer prices.

What makes a West Coast dock shutdown a potential detonator of a national and international financial and economic crisis? The size and magnitude of the trade flowing through the ports, the dependency of this North American gateway on Asian economies and the relative inflexibility to divert cargo to other ports.

Since 1980, waterborne trade through West Coast ports has increased from $61 billion to an estimated $285 billion this year. That is double the rate of increase in total U.S. trade growth.

This growth in trade activity is directly related to the increasing import-export activity with Asia. West Coast ports are now dominated by trade with Asia, which accounts for about three-quarters of all port activity (sea and air) in California and about 60% in Washington state. International trade accounts for about 19% of the U.S. gross domestic product and more than one-third of California's gross state product.

But the real dependency is one the other side of the Pacific. Asian exports arriving by ship at West Coast ports are expected to exceed $200 billion this year. This is the principal source of the vital foreign exchange net earnings needed to sustain the currency values, to service large foreign debts and to import the components and machinery required for growth and development of the stricken Asian economies. A significant disruption of West Coast ports would hamper recovery. It might also affect financial markets.

The ability to shift significant volumes of Asian trade to East Coast or Gulf of Mexico ports in the event of a West Count shutdown is now extremely limited because container facilities—ships, ports and infrastructure—are too specialized. The West Coast ports have made about 70% of all port investment in the 48 contiguous states for the past five years. As a result, high volume shipping is a powerful, integrated and, alas, inflexible system. Almost all the containers destined for the Central and Mountain states now pass through West Coast ports. So do nearly half of containers destined for the North Atlantic states.

But because of the specialization, the U.S. does not have the luxury of simply diverting Asian cargo to East Coast ports. Shipping is no longer a collection of roving ships docking here and there.

For all these reasons, the risk of a port strike is simply too great for the U.S. and world economies. The current act of management-union negotiations warrants a watchful eye from the White House and Treasury as well as the Department of Labor. If need be, both sides should be locked up at Camp David to finish the talks. But, in no case, should the ports be allowed to shut down.

Beach. "There have been long truck lines, and we've been getting calls from worried manufactures. We should be able to clear, things up pretty quickly."

Both sides declined to discuss what agreements, if any, were reached on several important contract issues; increasing the productivity of longshore workers, the number and type of jobs under union control, and the use of new labor-saving technology on the docks.

Negotiators said the terms of the contract will not be released until after the agreement is ratified in the weeks ahead by union members and the executive board of the maritime association.

"We are pleased to have reached an agreement that provides ILWU members with a package that rewards them for the hard work they put forward every day," said James Spinosa, the union's vice president and chief negotiator.

West Coast longshore workers now earn about $80,000 to $100,000 a year, depending on their skills and rank. Wages can go higher for heavy equipment operators, dock bosses and marine clerks who truck cargo.

Association officials headed into the negotiations saying the talks were critical for improving the reliability and productivity of the waterfront labor force.

They also said they hoped to engage in substantive discussions about the use of technology on the docks and ways to avoid repeating the score of costly work stoppages that followed the 1998 labor contract.

Among the issues critical to the union were increases in pension and medical benefits as well as the union's jurisdiction—the number of port-related jobs that fall under its control.

Labor officials said that if modernization continues, steps must be taken to preserve union positions and expand the organization's jurisdiction beyond port boundaries.

Both sides came to the bargaining table in May after several years of court fights and political rancor.

Within the union itself long-shore locals in Southern California had repeatedly tried to remove President Brian McWilliams and neutralize his power.

The locals issued a vote of no confidence in the president and demanded that he take a leave of absence for the reminder of his term Williams, however, has remained in office.

The union's internal conflicts coincided with series of sharp attacks by the Pacific Maritime Assn., which targeted the productivity and reliability of longshore workers.

Miniace a labor relations specialist who worked for Ford Motor Co. and Ryder, led the assault in public and in court, repeatedly suing the union over work stoppages and slowdown to no avail.

Miniace contends that productivity, measured by tons of cargo handled per hour paid has either stagnated or declined in each of the last four years. His greatest fear, he said, was that customers would send their goods through other ports in the United States or Mexico if things didn't improve on the West Coast.

Union officials criticized Miniace's aggressive approach, saying he was a newcomer who did not understand the shipping industry.

Longshore Workers, Shippers Reach Pact

(By Dan Weikel)

Longshore workers and shipping companies agreed to a new labor contract late Thursday, clearing the way for the resumption of normal cargo operations at West Coast ports that have been plagued by work stoppages and slowdowns for the last 10 days.

After almost two months of bargaining in San Francisco, the powerful International Longshore and Warehouse Union and the Pacific Maritime Assn. concluded a new three-year contract that will affect more than 10,000 dock workers in California, Oregon and Washington.

With tensions running high, there had been considerable fear that the West Coast was headed toward its first dock strike since 1971. West Coast ports, which handle cargo worth an estimated $280 billion every year, are critical to the nation's economy.

Details of the agreement were unavailable Thursday, but negotiators said it offered increases in pay, health insurance and pension benefits for future as well as current longshore retirees, some of whom now have pensions as low as $240 a month.

"I think this is a very good agreement for the ILWU and the Pacific Maritime Assn.," said Joseph N. Miniace, president of the West Coast's largest shipping association. "We had almost two weeks of work slowdowns, and we've been working until 3 a.m. the last few nights to get a contract. I am relieved; our team is relieved, and their team is relieved."

The Pacific Maritime Assn., which is the union's counterpart, negotiates and administers labor contracts for about 100 shipping lines, stevedore companies and terminal operators.

Association officials said Thursday evening that normal cargo operations will resume at all West Coast harbors, which have been hampered by work slowdowns since early July.

During their peak, longshore workers shut the Port of Oakland for two days and reduced the flow of cargo by at least half at many terminals along the coast.

The pace of work raised fears that the delays eventually would cost business and industry millions of dollars in lost revenue, not to mention losses in fees to port authorities.

Harbor officials in Long Beach and Los Angeles, the nation's largest combined port, said Thursday that any backlog of cargo should be cleared from the docks in the days ahead.

INTRODUCTION OF THE AIDS MARSHALL PLAN FUND FOR AFRICA

HON. BARBARA LEE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to introduce legislation designed to focus both attention and resources on the global emergency of HIV/AIDS, which is wreaking havoc in developing countries, most tragically in Sub-Saharan Africa.

Throughout much of the First Session of the 106th Congress, much information has been disseminated and discussed about the HIV/AIDS crisis in Africa. While AIDS has afflicted Africa since the late 1980's, the latest increases in the HIV/AIDS infected population are staggering. The disease is quite literally obliterating entire communities and devastating the continent.

The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) 1999 Annual Report notes that of the 14 million people world wide who have died from AIDS, 11 million are from the nations in Sub-Saharan Africa.

UNAIDS, the United Nations coordinating entity which tracks and combats HIV/AIDS, estimates that 22.5 million Sub-Saharan African adults and children are currently living with AIDS.

Additionally, the HIV/AIDS virus is devastating southern Africa. In Zimbabwe, 1 out of every 5 adults is infected with HIV/AIDS, and an estimated 1,400 people die every week from AIDS. In South Africa, an estimated 3.6 million people are infected with the HIV/AIDS.

A 1999 Census Bureau report states that the average life expectancy in Botswana, malawi, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe fell from approximately 65 years of age to 40 years of age. This represents the lowest life expectancy rates in the world and is largely due to the mortality rates from HIV/AIDS.

In April, I had the opportunity to participate in a Presidential Delegation to Southern Africa to examine the growing crisis of African children orphaned by AIDS. These children now total 7.8 million and are estimated to reach 40 million by 2010. The 1999 annual report by the United Nations Children's Fund tells us, and I couldn't agree more, that "the number of orphans, particularly in Africa, constitutes nothing less than an emergency, requiring an emergency response" and that "finding the resources needed to help stabilize the crisis and protect children is a priority that requires urgent action from the international community."

Not only do we have a moral imperative to address this epidemic, but it is in our own best interest to do so. HIV/AIDS in Africa is more than a humanitarian crisis, it is an economic crisis, crippling Africa's workforce in many areas and creating even greater economic instability where poverty is ever-present. For example, companies such as Barclays Bank and British Petroleum are now hiring two employees for each skilled job, assuming that one will die from AIDS. The Southern African AIDS Information Dissemination Service estimates that over the next 20 years, AIDS will reduce by one-fourth the value of the economies of sub-Saharan African countries. We cannot create successful and sustainable economic partnerships with African nations unless we address, in a substantial manner, the HIV/AIDS epidemic.

Additionally, HIV/AIDS poses serious national security concerns among the continent and globally. Perhaps the most stunning example is the 80 percent HIV infection rate of the military forces of Zimbabwe. Fledgling democratic nations, such as Nigeria, have yet to begin testing and educating their populations. Nigeria also has soldiers returning from peacekeeping operations in Liberia and Sierra Leone. If these soldiers are not tested and advised about the serious nature of their infections and educated about the risk they pose to others, we will be facing a whole new level of devastation from the epidemic.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the United States must take the lead in developing an immediate and sustained response to this crisis in Africa and globally. It is in our own national interest to aggressively attack the HIV/AIDS crisis in Africa, just we have with other diseases such as small pox and polio. Communicable diseases know no boundaries. As the world gets smaller, we have an obligation to eradicate HIV/AIDS from the face of the earth to protect the world family from its devastating effects. To date our response as a nation to this global epidemic has been sorely inadequate. For this reason, today I am introducing the AIDS Marshall Plan Fund for Africa Act (AMFPA). The AIDS Marshall Plan will assist African governments and non-governmental organizations to combat and control AIDS by providing grant funding for HIV/AIDS research, education, prevention and treatment.

Specifically, this legislation creates the AMPFA Corporation that shall be a new United States government agency. The Corporation shall work in conjunction with the heads of appropriate federal agencies currently engaged in combating the spread of HIV/AIDS in Africa. The AMFPA Corporation shall be governed by a Board of Directors with the advice and guidance from an International Advisory Board made up of distinguished leaders with impeccable integrity and commitment to the health and well being of people throughout the world. The Corporation shall also consult with representatives from community-based African health, education and related organizations regarding the efficacy of providing grant funding in African countries.

The Corporation shall also create a public-private partnership by soliciting funds from private companies and donor nations—especially the G8 countries—to contribute significant resources to its grant making activities.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that accountability is a key issue in today's foreign assistance environment. Therefore, the Corporation shall create self-sufficiency requirements for grant recipients to ensure their programs become increasingly independent of AMFPA funding. Additionally, the Corporation shall create criteria for African governments to establish matching funds based upon ability to pay and to demonstrate a national commitment to combating HIV/AIDS by establishing, for example, a national HIV/AIDS council or agency.

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, the administrative costs, or overhead associated with the AMPFA Corporation, are mandated to be no more than 8 percent of the Corporation's overall budget. The AMPFA Act authorizes the appropriation of $200 million for each of the fiscal years 2001 through 2005. Also, for each of the fiscal years 2002 through 2005, the Act authorizes an appropriation to fund an additional amount equal to 25 percent of the total funds contributed to the Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, in a June 1999 lecture entitled "The Global Challenges of AIDS", United States Secretary General Kofi Annan stated that "no company and no government can take on the challenge of AIDS alone. What is needed is a new approach to public health—combining all available resources, public an private, local and global". It is my intent that the AIDS Marshall Plan for Africa serve as a replicable model for addressing this crisis globally. Already, this proposed legislation has received the support of over 40 Members of Congress and has caught the interest of the African diplomatic corps, African and African-American organizations, AIDS activists, and global health organizations that are interested in providing assistance to pass the legislation.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I am committed to seeing this legislation through to final passage and encourage my colleagues to review the legislation and to contact me or my staff with questions. This bill will support Africa in a substantive and meaningful manner.

ABUSES BY STATE TAXING AUTHORITIES

HON. JERRY WELLER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I submit for the RECORD the following letter:

HON. DAVID WALKER,
Comptroller General of the United States,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. WALKER: I am writing to request an investigation by the United States General Accounting Office ("GAO") of alleged abuses by State taxing authorities against former residents.

As a Member of the Oversight Subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee, I spent significant time last year addressing the issue of taxpayer abuses by the Internal Revenue Service. As a result of our work, and Congressional and GAO investigations, many serious tax violations and wrongdoings were uncovered within the IRS. Last year, Congress held a series of hearings on the issue and addressed these serious problems by passing significant reforms and taxpayer protections as part of the "Internal Revenue Service Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998."

I am, therefore, disturbed to learn that while we addressed taxpayer abuses at the federal level, there may be just as many oppressive actions occurring throughout the country at the State level. A recent Forbes Magazine article entitled "Tax torture, local style" (July 6, 1998), highlights the fact that "[T]here are at least half as many revenue agents working for the states as the federal government" and "[C]ollectively, they are just as oppressive as the feds." See, Attached Article. In another recent article, the Los Angeles Times reported that the state taxing authority, the California Franchise Tax Board, "is second in size and scope only to the Internal Revenue Service—and by all accounts the state agency is the more efficient, more aggressive and more relentless of the two" and "there is little to stop the agency from becoming more aggressive." See, attached article, "State Agency Rivals IRS in Toughness," Los Angeles Times (August 2, 1999, page 1).

The Forbes article lists a number of state tax department problems including: (1) privacy violations by California, Connecticut, and Kentucky; (2) criminal or dubious activities by Connecticut, Indiana, Kentucky, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma, and Wisconsin; and (3) mass erroneous tax-due bills by Arizona, California, Indiana, Michigan, and Ohio. In addition, my office has recently received materials from taxpayers alleging abuse by State taxing agencies (e.g., materials from Mr. Gil Hyatt alleging a number of abuses by the California Franchise Tax Board ("FTB") against former residents of the State of California). See, Attachment.

I believe this issue is important and deserves study and a full investigation by the GAO. Should taxpayer abuses exist at the State level against former residents, I would consider recommending any and all appropriate legislation to address these deplorable activities and encourage State's Attorney Generals to begin separate investigations into such actions. We should do whatever we can to protect the rights of our citizens against overzealous Federal or State tax agencies.

I look forward to working with you and your staff on this important investigation.

Sincerely,

JERRY WELLER,
Member of Congress.

STATE TAXING AGENCIES ARE ABUSING FORMER TAXPAYERS IN VIOLATION OF THE CONSTITUTION

THE WIDESPREAD ABUSE

When Congress passed the Internal Revenue Service Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998, an era of tyranny at the IRS came to an end. Congressional hearings revealed story after story of taxpayer abuse by the IRS. The stories of abuse so inflamed the public and Congress that sweeping reform soon followed. But taxpayers abuse is still as prevalent as ever—only the perpetrators of this abuse are the state taxing agencies. In its rush to reform the IRS, Congress overlooked a whole other level of taxpayer abuse at the state level. This type of abuse by state taxing agencies has received attention from the press. In the article "Tax torture, local style," William Barrett discusses the "extortion," "sweepingly false declarations of taxes," "false notices," "[p]rivacy violations," and "criminal or dubious activities" by state taxing agencies. (William Barrett, Forbes, July 6, 1998). Many states have resorted to the same type of abusive tactics for which their federal counterpart—the IRS—was reprimanded by Congress.

In many cases, a state taxing agency has even exceeded the IRS in its recklessness and abusiveness. In a front-page LA Times article entitled "State Agency Rivals IRS in Toughness", Liz Pulliam compares the FTB unfavorably with the IRS—"the Franchise Tax Board is second in size and scope only to the Internal Revenue Service—and by all accounts the state agency is the more efficient, more aggressive and more relentless of the two". (Liz Pulliam, "State Agency Rivals IRS in Toughness", L.A. Times, August 2, 1999, at A1). She also quotes Mr. Dean Andal, a former FTB Board member, who criticizes the FTB as "brutal" and "hard and sometimes arbitrary" and states that "there is little to stop the agency from becoming more aggressive" (Pulliam, supra).

States are particularly abusive towards former residents who have moved to another state. Moving to another state is a common occurrence in the U.S., where citizens have the constitutional right to travel to and establish residency in any state in the United States. In 1996, Congress passed legislation which prevents states from taxing the pensions of retirees living in other states. This congressional legislation illustrates the need for federal intervention in order to prevent states from overreaching in their pursuit of tax revenue. Unfortunately, this action by Congress only focused on one small avenue in which states illegally pursue nonresidents for additional taxes. Another tactic is to assess a tax on citizens leaving the state by contesting when the former resident moved out of the state. Years after a citizen has relocated to another state, the state taxing agency will open a "residency audit" to extort a former resident.

THE ABUSE EXEMPLIFIED: THE CALIFORNIA FRANCHISE TAX BOARD

The abusive taxing tactics used by states is best illustrated by the California Franchise Tax Board (FTB), as indicated in the LA Times article supra:

"[The FTB] is tainted by arrogance and a stubborn unwillingness to compromise."

"For two years in a row, corporate tax executives have ranked California's [FTB] among the toughest, least fair and least predictable state tax agencies in the country."

STATE IS RANKED MOST AGGRESSIVE

Many corporate taxpayers agree. In both 1997 and 1998, company tax executives ranked California at the top of a 'worst offenders' list compiled by CFO magazine to rate the tax agencies of the 50 states . . . The state [California] was described as among the least predictable in administering tax policy and among the most likely to take a black-and-white stance on unclear areas of tax law. (Pulliam, supra).

The FTB particularly targets for abuse Nevada residents who formerly resided in California. The FTB agents are well trained in targeting such nonresidents. For example, the FTB targets wealthy and famous people living in gated affluent communities of Las Vegas. Agents develop a list of potential victims compiled from property rolls, tax records, and newspaper accounts. This list is supplemented by trips into the wealthy neighborhoods of Las Vegas in order to survey former California residents. Wealthy and famous individuals are the preferred targets because they are particularly vulnerable to threats of violating their privacy and causing them bad publicity. The FTB then audits the victim's financial and personal affairs. This includes agents making periodic trips across state lines in order to secretly survey victims. The agents trespass onto the victim's property, record the victim's movements, and even probe the victim's garbage and mail all while making sure to avoid contact with the victim. All of this is done stealthily, without the knowledge of the Nevada authorities. If the agents are caught in the act, they falsely claim immunity for their auditing tactics under color of authority and they claim a false constitutional right to collect taxes in Nevada—all while violating the constitutional rights of their victims and the sovereignty of Nevada. This is not a legitimate investigation, but a covert operation to uncover private information for what is best characterized as extortion of the victim.

The FTB hires inexperienced and unsuccessful recruits as auditors. Many of these auditors are untrained and unsupervised. They are given training manuals that they do not study. The training materials are illustrated with such sadistic cartoons as a skull-and-crossbones on the cover of the penalties section (which is to illustrate how to pirate an additional 75% override on the tax assessment). They have little or no legal background or training and do not know nor do they care about the victim's Constitutional rights. They except legal cliches and case law from other audits and insert them throughout their workpapers indiscriminently. They mimic comments that they read that supports the FTB's position and they ignore information about supports the victim's position. Some auditores are so inept that they actually use pseudonyms from "boilerplate" and training manuals audits (e.g., Marie Assistant) in their own audits because they do not understand such an obvious step as the need to replace the pseudonyms in the "boilerplate" audits with the actual names of the individuals in the particular case under audit. These are the kind of people that California has charged with the awesome power of auditing taxpayers—"the power to tax is the power to destroy."

The FTB gathers large quantities of private information about the victim during the audit. The FTB goes to the victim's adversaries, who are not privy to the victim's private information, and offer them a way to help dispose of their adversary, the FIB's victim, by concocting damaging victims evidence against the FTB's victim. A bitter ex-spouse or ex-girlfriend, an estranged relative, or a vengeful former employee are preferred. The FTB avoids contacting the victim's friends, and close relatives who are privy to the victim's private information because such witnesses would undermine the FTB's attack on the victim. The FTB has actually sent out intimidating and harassing letters to the victim's friends, colleagues, and business associates and has even gone so far as to audit these people apparently to intimidate and harrass them, to isolate the victim, and to deprive the victim of the support that he or she needs at such a crucial time. The FTB's apparent intent is to have the victim embattled by adversaries and separated from supporters. "They tend to look at every audit as a battle. In the gray areas, they push the evelope rather than work out a reasonable compromise." (Pulliam, supra).

The FTB auditors boldly admit to emphasizing bad evidence for the taxpayer and ignoring good evidence for the taxpayer. In one of the FTB's largest residency audits, the auditor trumped-up a large assessment with penalties based on false affidavits from the victim's adversaries while completely ignoring all of the victim's close relatives, friends, and associates. Also in this same audit, the auditor relied on about the fifty false California connections while ignoring a thousand solid Nevada connections and preempted submission of thousands-more solid Nevada connections by the victim. Even more significant, the thousands of Nevada connections involved thousands-of-times more value (purchase offers on custom homes,

The California Legislature was so suspicious of and concerned about the FTB that it passed the Taxpayer's Bill of Rights statute, which among other things, forbids the FTB from evaluating employees based upon revenue collected or assessed or upon revenue collected or assessed or upon production quotas. The law also states that the head of the FTB must certify in writing annually to the California State Legislature that the FTB has not evaluated employees based upon revenue collected or assessed or quotas. But this certification is misleading since, by an indications, promotions and rewards still go to those FTB employees who bring in the most revenue. And quotas by different names abound in the FTB. Once FTB employee rapidly progressed from a low-ranking auditor to a high-prestigage position for making one of the FTB's largest residency assessments ever. FTB auditors must generate over $1,000 of revenue for every hour charged to an audit. A quota system is indicated in the LA Times article supra: "The agency [FTB] added 362 auditors between 1992 and 1996, promising the legislative that the new positions would boost collections."

Furthermore, there is little supervising of FTB auditors. Instead, this type of auditing and tax collection appears to be encouraged by management. The FTB claims to have layers of review in order to ensure accuracy and fairness; however, these layers actually proliferate the fraud of the FTB auditors. The auditor's supervisors do not get involved in the audits, instead relying completely on an auditor's self-serving narrative report in reviewing an audit without any regard for the victim's evidence or arguments. Unbelievably, FTB auditors and management get credit for assessments and get promotions and rewards immediately after the audit even though the assessments may never be collected at all and any collection may be decades away. This encourages excessive tax assessments for immediate promotions and rewards, but the feedback that it was a bad audit may be more than a decade away.

The legal department gets involved in reviewing penalties, but indications are that the lawyers encourage unwarranted penalties to force a settlement rather than provide an independent review. This is confirmed by the fact that the FTB audit and protest proceedings are expressly exempted from the California administrative proceedings act to permit the FTB to proceed in violation of the victim's Constitutional right to due process. The FTB implies that the "protest‘ proceeding is an independent review of an objective protest officer, when it fact it is a contination of the investigation to gather more information, to attempt to force the victim into an extortionate settlement, and to prepare the FTB's case for any appeal by the victim to the next stage of the administrative proceeding. The victim tells his case to a wolf-in-sheep's-clothing, misleading the victim into presenting his or her case to an independent reviewer when in fact the protest officer is an important part of the FTB's abuse. The FTB's denial of due process to a victim under the sham that the audit and the protest are merely investigations is untenable and will be easily declared unconstitutional when challenged. The FTB has deprived victims of their Constitutional rights for too long.

THE FTB'S PLOT—FALSIFY THE OFFICIAL RECORDS

By contesting the residency of former California residents who have moved from the state, the FTB assesses additional taxes on money earned after the former resident moved from California. This type of treatment of nonresidents is a blatant violation of the victim's Constitutional right to move between states. Despite overwhelming evidence to the contrary from the victim, the FTB will often allege a residence date that allows it to encompass as much additional tax revenue as possible. In order to support its outlandish residency date, the FTB will disregard the victim's substantial Nevada connections, will overly emphasize and rely upon minimal (and often erroneous) California connections, will distort Nevada connections into California connections, and will devise nonexistent California connections.

The FTB maintains, for example, that a six-month lease on an apartment in Nevada and opening escrow on a custom home purchased in Nevada are not Nevada residency connections. The FTB has gone so far as to actually maintain that, for purposes of residency, a former California resident can only claim to have resided in a Nevada apartment if: 1) the apartment complex has security gates, 2) the apartment is left "trashed" after moving out, 3) the apartment managers can provide information on the movements of the tenant (even after several years have passed since the tenant lived there), and 4) poor people do not reside in the apartment complex.

Furthermore, the FTB maintains that a former California resident is only permitted to sell a California house to a stranger and that a former California resident is only permitted to reside in a Nevada house if he can prove the Nevada house was not purchased for investment or appreciation and only if the Nevada house has security gates. The FTB asserts that California voter registration and obtaining a California driver's license are significant California residency connections, but disregards the same actions when taken in Nevada as mere formalities that are easy to do and not relevant to the issue of Nevada residency despite the FTB's own regulations and decades of case law to the contrary. All of these holdings can be found in the FTB's own audit files.

Unbelievably, the FTB relies on the following considerations as supporting California residency:

An overnight stay in a California motel is a California residency connection while a six-month lease on an apartment in Nevada is not a Nevada residency connection.

A bank account in a Nevada bank is a California residency connection because the Nevada bank also has a California branch.

A mail-order purchase made from Nevada to a California mail order provider for delivery of merchandise to a Nevada home is a California residency connection even though the mail order purchase was made from Nevada by a Nevadan and was delivered to a Nevada address.

This type of California mail-order purchase is a sham purchase because, the FTB argues, the Nevadan could have bought the product in Nevada and saved the cost of freight.

The FTB uses circular reasoning by concocting a late Nevada residency date and then alleging that purchases made in Nevada after the concocted Nevada residency date are California residency connections for the period before this concocted Nevada residency date in order to attempt to support this date.

Actual Nevada receipts are not Nevada connections while false California receipts that the FTB concocts are California connections.

A credit-card purchase made in Nevada for use in a Nevada house is a California residency connection if the credit-card charge, unknown to the Nevadan, is cleared through a California credit-card office.

A California driver's license, surrendered to the Nevada DMV upon obtaining a Nevada driver's license, is a California residency connection because the surrendered California driver's license had not yet expired while the Nevada driver's license is not a Nevada residency connection because it is easy to get.

Gifts sent by a Nevadan to an adult child or a grandchild living in California constitutes a California residency connection.

Checks drawn on a Nevada bank are California residency connection even though the checks were written in Nevada by a Nevada resident to Nevada workers for work done on a Nevada house and where the checks were even cashed in Nevada; and a regulated investment company open-ended fund (a mutual-fund money-market account) was deemed by the FTB auditor to be a California bank account constituting a California residency connection and a basis for a fraud determination even though the FTB Legal branch gave a legal opinion stating that the regulated investment company is not a bank and normally not a California residency connection.

This is only a partial list of the kind of absurd considerations that the FTB will use to rationalize its residency determinations. Such far-fetched and concocted California connections are what the FTB relies upon to support its residency determinations—the FTB must make the most of what it has available and what it can concoct in order to extort California income taxes from nonresidents.

CELEBRATING THE SERVICE OF MS. EMILY AMOR

HON. TONY P. HALL

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize a wonderful woman and exemplary citizen of the District of Columbia. Ms. Emily A. Amor is now 96 years old and has just been named the "Volunteer of the Century" by the Central Union Mission. She has been an active volunteer for almost 20 years.

Her dedication to God, to her country and to those in need has been proven through a lifetime of service. She has served by praying, working and volunteering. Her commitment has led her to join me every Wednesday morning at 7 am to pray for the city of Washington, DC, its leaders and its residents. She has served meals to the homeless on every major holiday for years. And before retiring at age 70, she worked with the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

She is truly an amazing example of a selfless servant. She has a heart-felt compassion for others, especially those who are poor and hurting. Her life has truly exemplified Jesus Christ's example of loving one's neighbor, no matter who they might be. I only hope that I can have half as much life in me as she does when I reach age 96.

I ask my colleagues to join me in commending Emily for all of her great work. I am glad to be able to call her a friend and am humbled by her servant's heart. I wish her the best for many years to come.

THE NUCLEAR WEAPONS DE-ALERTING RESOLUTION

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, 54 years ago tomorrow a single bomb in a single city changed our world. The atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima leveled the city, engulfed the rubble in a fireball, and killed 100,000 people. Three days later another 70,000 people died at Nagasaki, and people are still dying today from leukemia and other remnants of those explosions.

The victims of Hiroshima cast shadows from the explosion's blinding light that were permanently etched not only in the remaining buildings but also in our souls. Since August 6th, 1945 we have lived in fear that such nuclear destruction would happen again, perhaps in the United States. Today, the accidental launch of a single missile with multiple warheads could kill 600,000 people in Boston, or 3,000,000 people in New York, or 700,000 people in San Francisco or right here in Washington, DC. If that missile sparked a nuclear exchange, the result would be worldwide devastation.

For 40 years of Cold War we played a game of nuclear chicken with the Soviet Union, racing to make ever more nuclear bombs, praying that the other side would turn aside. During the Cuban missile crisis and many other times we came perilously close to going over the cliff. Then in 1991 the Cold War and the Soviet Union ended. Yet today we not only keep hundreds of nuclear missiles with nowhere to point them, we keep many of them ready to fire at a moment's notice.

This threat from this "launch-on-warning" policy is real. On January 25, 1995, when Russia radar detected a launch off the coast of Norway, Boris Yeltsin was notified and the "nuclear briefcase" activated. It took eight minutes—just a few minutes before the deadline to respond to the apparent attack—before the Russian military determined there was no threat from what turned out to be a U.S. scientific rocket. The U.S. is not immune: on November 9, 1979 displays at four U.S. command centers all showed an incoming full-scale Soviet missile attack. After Air Force planes were launched it was discovered that the signals were from a simulation tape.

And the danger of an accidental nuclear war is growing. The Russian command and control system is decaying. Power has repeatedly been shut off in Russian nuclear weapons facilities because they couldn't afford to pay their electricity bills. Communications at their nuclear weapons centers have been disrupted because thieves stole the cables for their copper. And at New Year's the "Y2K" bug in computers that are not programmed to recognize the year 2000 could cause monitoring screens to go blank or even cause false signals.

There is no reason to run the terrible risk of an accidental nuclear war. It is hard today to imagine a "bolt out of the blue" sudden nuclear attack. And even if the U.S. was devastated by an attack, the thousands of nuclear warheads we have on submarines would survive unscathed. Keeping weapons on high alert is an intemperate response to an implausible event.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to take a large step away from the brink of nuclear war, to take our nuclear weapons off of hair-trigger alert. Today I an introducing a resolution that expresses the sense of Congress that we should do four things:

We should immediately remove some nuclear weapons from high alert.

We should study methods to further slow the firing of all nuclear weapons.

We should use these unilateral measures to jump-start an eventual agreement with Russia and other nuclear powers to take all weapons off of alert.

And we should quickly establish a joint U.S.-Russian early warning center before the Year 2000 turnover.

These are not new or radical ideas. President George Bush in 1991 ordered an immediate standdown of nuclear bombers and took many missiles off of alert. President Gorbachev reciprocated a week later by deactivating bombers, submarines, and land-based missiles. Leading security experts including former Senator Sam Nunn, former Strategic Air Command chief Gen. Lee Butler, and a National Academy of Sciences panel have endorsed further measures to take weapons off of high alert. Two-third of Americans in a 1998 poll support taking all nuclear forces off alert, and this week I received a petition signed by 270 of my constituents from Lexington, MA calling on the President to de-alert nuclear missiles.

I urge my colleagues to join together to cosponsor this resolution. The best way we can commemorate the anniversary of the nuclear explosion at Hiroshima is to make sure we will never blunder into an accidental nuclear holocaust.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

HON. CHARLES W. "CHIP" PICKERING

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. PICKERING. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to address one of the many reforms I believe are necessary to improve the administrative processes of the Federal Communications Commission (FCC). The issue that I believe needs to be addressed immediately relates to the proliferation of merger activity in the telecommunications industry.

Since passage of the Telecommunications Act of 1996, the industry has seen massive upheaval as companies try to position themselves for the new Information Age economy. Many of these companies are attempting to combine their strengths to better position themselves to compete in a deregulated marketplace. One of the problems these companies have faced recently is the regulatory uncertainty of the FCC's merger review process.

As we all know, the telecommunications industry is one of the key driving forces of our economy. As such, we in the Congress need to ensure that unnecessary government intervention doesn't cause needless delay in bringing new and innovative products to the market. Even more so, we must ensure that the business community is not competitively disadvantaged by an endless regulatory review process.

Whenever a company is required to seek approval of the government, there is some uncertainty, particularly as it relates to the length of merger review. My bill is narrowly crafted to remedy this situation. My bill would require the FCC to approve or deny a merger application within 60 days of being on public notice, the FCC can extend this by 30 days with a majority vote by the Commissioners. When reviewing mergers or acquisitions by small- or mid-sized companies the time frame is limited to 45 days with no extensions. It's that simple—no delays, no foot-dragging.

When Congress passed the Telecommunications Act of 1996, the Congress imposed a variety of time constraints on the FCC. I believe that many of us who were involved in that process did not think that we would subject the business community to these lengthy and uncertain delays at the FCC. One of the biggest problems that some of my constituents have raised with me is not knowing if a merger will take 3 months, 9 months or even 16 months. There is simply no logic or rationale to the FCC's lengthy process.

The uncertainty of the regulatory process can have devastating effects on both large and small companies. This potential for lengthy reviews can force companies to miss product roll-outs, miss a window of opportunity to raise venture capital, and at times has been manipulated by competitors to forestall a decision by the agency. We simply cannot allow these scenarios to continue.

This legislation will do what all legislation should do—it requires the processes of government to work for the community they are meant to serve. Giving a definite time period for reviewing a merger will allow companies to better plan their entries into new markets. It will give Wall Street more certainty in making investment decisions. And finally, it will remove the oftentimes subjective nature of the review process and require the agency to reach a decision in a fair and efficient manner.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. TIME LIMITS ESTABLISHED.

Title IV of the Communications Act of 1934 is amended by adding after section 416 (47 U.S.C. 416) the following new section:

"SEC. 417. TIME LIMITS FOR COMMISSION ACTIONS.

"(1) DEADLINE FOR ACTION.—The Commission shall make a determination with respect to the public interest, convenience, and necessity in connection with any application for the transfer or assignment of any license under title III, or with respect to an application for the acquisition or operation of lines under title II, not later than 60 days after the date of submittal of such application to the Commission, except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3).

"(2) EXTENSION.—The deadline for such determination may be extended for a single additional 30 days by order of the Commission approved by a majority of its members.

"(3) SHORTER DEADLINE FOR CERTAIN ACQUISITIONS INVOLVING SMALL LOCAL EXCHANGE CARRIERS.—In connection with the acquisition, directly or indirectly, by one local exchange carrier or its affiliate of the securities or assets of another local exchange carrier or its affiliates where the acquiring carrier or its affiliate does not, or by reason of the acquisition will not, have direct or indirect ownership or control of more than 2 percent of the subscriber lines installed in the aggregate in the United States—

"(A) the deadline under paragraph (1) shall be 45 days after the date of submittal of the application; and

"(B) the deadline shall not be subject to extension under paragraph (2).

Any such application deemed approved under this subsection shall be deemed approved without conditions."

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The amendment made by section 1 shall apply with respect to any application described in section 417(a)(1) of the Communications Act of 1934 (as added by this Act) that is submitted to the Federal Communications Commission on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) PENDING APPLICATIONS.—With respect to any application pending before the Federal Communications Commission for more than 60 days as of the date of enactment of this Act, the Commission shall approve or deny such application with or without conditions within 30 days after such date of enactment. If the Commission fails to approve or deny such applications within such 30-day period, such pending applications shall be deemed approved without condition. Section 417(a)(2) of the Communications Act of 1934 (as added by this Act) shall not apply to such pending applications.

BUSINESS, MILITARY AND COMMUNITY LEADERS MAKE GOOD SENSE ON DEFENSE SPENDING

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, one of the most important issues we face today is how to adequately meet important social needs at a time when a majority in Congress unfortunately insists on large yearly increases in military spending while also operating under the budget caps of the 1997 budget act. Our national policy continues to mistakenly spend huge amounts of money defending ourselves and the rest of the world from a military threat that has greatly receded, at the expense or a number of other important social and economic goals of our society.

I commend Business Leaders for Sensible Priorities for its thoughtful leadership on educating the public about the important of redirecting American resources away from the military in order to appropriately respond to the legitimate needs of Americans. I ask that three sets of recent statements by national security experts Admiral Stansfield Turner (US Navy ret.) and Vice Admiral Jack Shanahan (USN-ret.); social advocacy leaders Marian Wright Edelman, President of the Children's Defense Fund, and Bob Chase, President of the National Education Association; and business leaders Bruce Klatsky, chairman & CEO of Philips—Van Heusen, and Mohammad Akhter, executive director of the American Public Health Association, which appeared in the New York Times under the auspices of Business Leaders for Sensible Priorities, be inserted into the RECORD. These commentaries do a good job outlining how our national security would in no way be endangered by a lower defense budget and the socially constructive ways in which the savings generated by such a reduction could be directed.

[From the New York Times, August 1, 1999]

If My Business Used Pentagon Accounting Practices, I'd Be Sent to Jail

(By Bruce Klatsky)

A 1995 General Accounting Office analysis revealed that the Pentagon's financial books can't account for $43 billion in payments made to defense contractors. The New York Times reported two weeks ago that the Pentagon "defied the law and the Constitution by spending hundreds of millions on military projects that lawmakers never approved." The Los Angeles Times reported last month that $5.5 million was diverted from the Pentagon's operating budget to refurnish the residences of Navy brass.

If my publicly-traded, SEC-regulated company handled our finances this way I'd be facing jail time.

It's not just that taxpayer funds are being wasted, but my business experience in allocating scarce resources tells me that a dollar can only be invested once. Those billions squandered by Pentagon bureaucrats are unavailable for programs that really build national security, and not just appropriate military needs but our education and health care too. The savings from reducing military waste are there. To get a copy of our alternative defense budget, showing how America can trim 15% of the Pentagon budget or $40 billion every year, call us at the number below or download it from our web site.

[From the New York Times, August 1, 1999]

If We Invested More in Health Care, We'd Save Lives

(By Mohammad Akhter)

Thankfully, the Cold War is over. Challenges to America's national security now come mainly from within: violence, drug abuse and people without access to health care all pose serious threats to our nation's health. Today's U.S. economy is the strongest in recent memory, but we are neglecting critical health problems that will increase the burden of disease on the next generation.

America needs to change its priorities. Wise investments in public health programs provide handsome returns in good health and prosperity. Here's where some of the unaccounted for Pentagon money should have gone for real investment:

As a step towards covering all Americans, we should provide health insurance for the 11 million American children who don't have it costing $11 billion annually.

It would cost $644 million to fully immunize the children who will be born next year.

All women could be assured of screening for breast and cervical cancer for just over $1 billion.

We could rebuild the nation's system of disease detection, protecting Americans from diseases such as flu and foodborne illness as well as possible bioterrorist attacks for $1.3 billion.

Those sound public health investments would pay real dividends in communities across America. The future depends on the choices we make today. Shifting our priorities from Pentagon waste to unmet health needs will save lives, and assure good health for this and the next generation.

[From the New York Times, July 30, 1999]

Why Should We Pay for Nuclear Weapons We Do Not Need?

(By Admiral Stansfield Turner, U.S. Navy, ret.)

Last week, the House of Representatives voted to cancel the $64 billion F-22 fighter aircraft program because America doesn't need such an expensive weapon. The same criteria that led the House to scuttle that Cold War holdover should lead to canceling other unnecessary weapons programs.

There's more in the Pentagon's budget to cut, and invest in Sensible Priorities. Case in point: We spend over $30 billion each year maintaining a nuclear arsenal at a level of close to 12,000 nuclear warheads. A very much smaller, 1,000-warhead force would still provide the destructive force of 40,000 Hiroshima explosions. That would surely be enough to protect America from any security threat. Such a reduction would save as much as $17 billion annually.

The United States must maintain the world's strongest armed forces, but that does not mean we should spend money on weapons we couldn't possibly use. Besides large savings on nuclear weapons, there are other ways to cut waste or trim excesses in the Pentagon's budget without jeopardizing our national security. Business Leaders for Sensible Priorities has developed suggestions for reducing the defense budget by 15%, or $40 billion yearly. To get a copy, call the number below or download it from our website.

Our children and grandchildren deserve to inherit a strong America, but one that is strong in education, health care, equality of opportunity and quality of life, as well as military power.

[From the New York Times, July 30, 1999]

Why Can't We Afford To Modernize Our Schools?

(By Bob Chase)

Nothing is more important for our nation's future than a high quality education for America's children. Educators know that students learn best in safe and modern schools, equipped with the latest technology.

However, according to the U.S. General Accounting Office, America's public schools need $112 billion for repair and modernization. This is no surprise. The average school building in America is 50 years old.

Unfortunately, some in Congress are choosing to ignore this dire need. That puts our nation and our children at risk. Record student enrollment and the demands of a 21st Century workforce make investing in education a national imperative.

Other nations fund the education of their children at significantly higher levels than we do. Let's make our children's education our number one priority. Kids deserve a bigger slice of the budget "pie," and they should get it. One future depends on it.

[From the New York Times, July 28, 1999]

I Know Something About National Security

(By Vice Admiral Jack Shanahan, U.S. Navy Ret.)

Not every new weapon increases our nation's military strength. Some even weaken us. The F-22 fighter jet is just such a weapon.

So congratulations to the House of Representatives for voting last week to halt the F-22 program. The House got it right, America doesn't need this plane to maintain unquestioned air superiority.

There's a lot more waste in the Pentagon budget besides the $64 billion F-22. The same prudence the House showed scrapping that wasteful program should also be applied to other unnecessary weapons programs. An analysis by Lawrence Korb, former assistant secretary of defense under President Reagan, shows how to trim the Pentagon budget 15%—about $40 billion annually—while maintaining the world's strongest armed forces. To get a copy of Dr. Korb's report, call the number or go to the website listed below.

Having served 35 years in uniform through three wars, I know what makes America strong. It's not just weapons. National security is also about investing in education and healthcare that make our people strong.

[From the New York Times, July 28, 1999]

We Know About Helping Children Grow Up Healthy

(By Marian Wright Edelman)

Our nation's strength is in our people, and our "national security" should be measured by how we invest in children.

Is it fair that the richest nation in the world has over 14 million children living in poverty and more than 11 million without health insurance? Is it fair that one million children eligible for Head Start cannot get in, or that only about one child in ten receives child care assistance?

By curbing military spending, we can free up money for vital, unmet needs like providing health insurance for all uninsured children. For the cost of each F-22 jet fighter, we could provide child care spaces for 50,000 more children.

Health care and early education are crucial for children. Countless studies show that healthy children are more likely to stay in school, stay out of trouble, and get on the path to productive lives. Head Start and child care programs prepare children for school and help their parents work. At the same time Congress debates spending more money for new weapons, it will have a chance to vote on whether to invest more dollars in child care. I hope they make the right choice.

LA LECHE LEAGUE INTERNATIONAL

HON. KAREN McCARTHY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Ms. McCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize La Leche League International (LLLI), the World Alliance for Breastfeeding, National Breastfeeding Month, August 1999, and World Breastfeeding Week, August 1–7, 1999. The theme for World Breastfeeding Week this year is Breastfeeding: Education for Life, sponsored by LLLI and WABA. World Breastfeeding Week is part of WABA's ongoing campaign to increase public awareness of the importance of breastfeeding. LLLI is a founding member of WABA's global alliance of health care providers, non-governmental organizations, and mother support groups.

This week, all over the world, people will be participating in the World Walk for Breastfeeding, organized by La Leche League International, an international nonprofit organization that provides breastfeeding information and encouragement through mother-to-mother support groups and interactions with parents, physicians, researchers, and health care providers. LLLI reaches over 200,000 women monthly in 66 countries.

This year's World Walk for Breastfeeding will be the ninth annual walk, and my community of the Greater Kansas City area will be participating through twelve local La Leche groups. The Walk is a fundraiser for LLLI, and a portion of the money raised will stay with the local groups to fund their outreach and support activities.

Breastfeeding has been identified by the U.S. Surgeon General as a high priority objective for the year 2000, with the goal of increasing to at least 75 percent the proportion of mothers who breastfeed their infants in the early postpartum period and to at least 50 percent those who breastfeeding until the infant is six months of age. All available knowledge indicates that human milk optimally enhances the growth, development, and well being of the infant by providing the best possible nutrition, protection against specific infection and allergies, and the promotion of maternal and infant bonding. Further, breastfeeding is economical and promotes healthier mothers, and it benefits society through lower health care costs for infants, a healthier workforce, stronger family bonds, and less waste.

August 1 makes the ninth anniversary of the signing of the Innocenti Declaration on the Protections, Promotion, and Support of Breastfeeding which was adopted in 1990 by 32 governments and 10 United Nations Agencies. This Declaration states: AS a global goal for optimal maternal and child health and nutrition, all women should be enabled to practice exclusive breastfeeding and all infants should be fed exclusively on breast milk from birth to four to six months of age. Thereafter, children should continue to breastfeed while receiving appropriate and adequate complementary foods for up to two years of age or beyond. This child feeding ideal is to be achieved by creating an appropriate environment of awareness and support so that women can benefit in this manner.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in celebrating National Breastfeeding Month and World Breastfeeding Week, and let us lend our support to this global effort to nurture our infants and provide them with the best possible nutrition in the first months of their lives.

TRIBUTE TO INDIA'S INDEPENDENCE

HON. FRANK PALLONE, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to join with the people of India and the Indian-American community to commemorate India's Independence Day. The 52nd anniversary of India's Independence will actually occur on August 15th, while Congress is in recess, so I wanted to take this opportunity tonight, before we adjourn, to mark this important occasion before my colleagues in this House and the American people.

On August 15, 1947, the people of India finally gained their independence from Britain, following a long and determined struggle that continues to inspire the world. In his stirring "midnight hour" speech, India's first Prime Minister, Jawaharlal Nehru, set the tone for the newly established Republic, a Republic devoted to the principles of democracy and secularism. In more than half a century since then, India has stuck to the path of free and fair elections, a multi-party political system and the orderly transfer of power from one government to its successor.

India continues to grapple with the challenges of delivering broad-based economic development to a large and growing population. Indeed, today's New York Times reports that India's population is expected to reach one billion in about 10 days. India has sought to provide full rights and representation to its many ethnic, religious and linguistic communities. And India seeks to be a force for stability and cooperation in the strategically vital South Asia region. In all of these respects, India stands out as a model for other Asian nations, and developing countries everywhere, to follow.

This year, we have seen that India faces serious challenges from outside forces intent on destabilizing the democracy that India's founders dreamed of and that successive generations of Indians have worked to build. Armed militants, operating with the support of Pakistan, crossed over onto India's side of the Line of Control in Kashmir. India's armed forces responded to this incursion in a firm but restrained manner. At the same time, India has sought to resolve its differences with Pakistan in a peaceful way, through bipartisan negotiations.

Mr. Speaker, next month, India will once again demonstrate its commitment to democracy for all the world to see, as it conducts Parliamentary elections. As in past years, hundreds of millions of men and women from all across India—Hindus, Muslims, Buddhists, Jains, Christians—will cast ballots, choosing from candidates representing a diverse array of political parties. I am confident that the elections will be free and fair, as they have been in past years. Whichever party will form the new government, I am confident that they will continue to build on the dream of India's first Prime Minister Nehru to move forward on the path of representative democracy and economic development.

There is a rich tradition of shared values between the United States and India. We both proclaimed our independence from British colonialism. India derived key aspects of its Constitution, particularly the statement of Fundamental Rights, from our own Bill of Rights. It is well known that Dr. Martin Luther King derived many of his ideas of non-violent resistance to injustice from the teachings of Mahatma Gandhi. That commitment to the use of peaceful means to overthrow tyranny has been emulated by such diverse world leaders as Nelson Mandela and Lech Walesa.

Today, the National Capital Planning Commission here in Washington approved a small park with a memorial to Mahatma Gandhi across from the Indian Embassy on Massachusetts Avenue in Washington, D.C., known as Embassy Row. Last year, this House approved legislation co-sponsored by myself and the Gentleman from Florida, Mr. McCollum, authorizing the Government of India to establish the memorial. The proposed Gandhi Memorial will be a most worthy addition to the landscape of our nation's capital, and it won't cost the American taxpayers anything to construct it.

Another extremely important link between our two countries, a human link, is the more than one million Americans of Indian descent. I have the honor of representing a Congressional district in Central New Jersey with one of the largest Indian-American communities in the country. Increasingly, my colleagues in this House, Democrats and Republicans from all regions of the country, have indicated to me that their Indian-American constituents are playing increasingly prominent roles in all walks of life.

Another way in which India and America continue to grow closer is through increased economic ties. The historic market reforms begun in India at the beginning of this decade continue to move forward, offering unparalleled opportunities for trade, investment and joint partnerships—all of which include a human dimension of friendship and cooperation, in addition to the economic benefits for both societies.

Mr. Speaker, for more than a year, United States-India ties have been strained over the issue of nuclear testing, and the subsequent imposition of unilateral American sanctions against India. There is a growing bipartisan effort in Congress, and within the Administration, to lift these sanctions, which have not advanced United States interests and have only served to set back the growing United States-India relationship.

Just this week, we witnessed a debate in this chamber as an amendment to the Foreign Operations Appropriations bill was proposed to cut aid to India, in a purely punitive gesture. The amendment was subsequently withdrawn, after one Member of Congress after another rose to oppose the amendment and to argue for a strengthened United States-India relationship.

Mr. Speaker, there are indications that President Clinton will visit India and other countries in the South Asia region early next year. It's been 20 years since a United States President last visited India, so I think such a visit is long overdue.

Just a few weeks ago, we Americans celebrated the Fourth of July. For a billion people in India, one-sixth of the human race, the 15th of August holds the same significance. I am proud to extend my congratulations to the people of India, citizens of the world's largest democracy, as they celebrate the 52nd anniversary of their independence.

H.J. RES. 57—DISAPPROVING EXTENSION OF NONDISCRIMINATORY TREATMENT TO PRODUCTS OF PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

SPEECH OF

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I have thought long and hard about what position to take on the Joint Resolution disapproving Normal Trade Relations with China. While it may be in both our national and global interests to continue to engage China economically, I feel strongly that the United States cannot sit by and ignore the flagrant abuses of human rights that China continues to perpetrate. In good conscience, I cannot support NTR for China.

This is a difficult issue for me personally. As someone who has had the opportunity to travel extensively throughout Asia, I feel a deep connection with that part of the world. I have spent time in Tibet, getting to know the people and sharing in their customs and traditions. The Tibetans are a peaceful and spiritual people, undeserving of the abuses they have suffered under the Chinese government.

When I climbed Mt. Everest in 1994, our group struggled with which route to take so as not to land on Tibetan territory and thereby give support to the Chinese government. Although we did eventually set foot in Tibet, every individual in our group made a commitment to do what we could in our own lives to show support for the people of Tibet and to protest China's human rights record and occupation of Tibet. It is with this commitment in mind that I support this resolution.

The Chinese Government maintains one of the most atrocious human rights records in the world. China continues to wage an all-out war on the people, environment, religion and culture of Tibet. In the 46 years of Chinese occupation, over one million Tibetans have been killed and thousands more unjustly tortured, shot and imprisoned. China has plagued Tibet with extensive deforestation and open dumping of nuclear waste. But the abuses are not only reserved for Tibet. Ten years after the Tiananmen Square Massacre, the Chinese Government has still not made good on its commitment to increase social freedom. Just last week, the Chinese Government banned the religious group, Falun Gong, and imprisoned 5,000 people for peacefully exercising their basic human rights.

As the leader of the free world, the United States is in a unique position to push for freedom and democracy for the people in the region. We must use this opportunity to make a statement to China that we will not tolerate its blatant disregard for human rights.

VFW KANSAS CITY

HON. KAREN McCARTHY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Ms. MCCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my constituents in the Fifth District of Missouri and citizens around the country to honor the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW). Kansas City, home of the Veterans of Foreign Wars' National Headquarters, is proud to be the host site for the 100th Convention of this American Institution. I would like to recognize the VFW, an organization dedicated to 100 years of this nation's men and women who have sustained our country's freedom through personal sacrifice.

In 1899 veterans from the Spanish American War united and became the voice of the veteran. Veterans who fought side by side on the battlefield became the advocates for a strong national defense and supporters for veterans and their rights. The last century has witnessed the continual evolution of this organization as it paralleled the growth of our country.

Every decade had presented a different social and economic America. Every conflict has been fought with a new generation of military fortified with the latest technology and skills. The challenge for this organization has been to understand and provide for the emotional and social needs of every generation of veterans. They have met these challenges by serving as lobbyists, advisors, educators, and organizers of beneficial programs for the enlisted and retired. They are active contributors to their community, champions of today's youth, and always vigilant in recognizing and remembering those who made the ultimate sacrifice for freedom.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in saluting the VFW's and all veterans' contributions during both war and peace.

THE FORD CENTER AND BETHEL A.M.E. CHURCH: MAKING A DIFFERENCE IN THE ASBURY PARK COMMUNITY

HON. FRANK PALLONE, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, July 10, 1999, the Bethel African Methodist Episcopal Church of Asbury Park, NJ, dedicated the Bethel Ford Center and Community Development Corporation. The successful completion of the major improvements at the center is a testimony to the long-standing commitment of both the Bethel AME Church, and of the two great community leaders for whom it is named, Mr. and Mrs. William Benjamin Ford.

The Ford Center is a community outreach program serving Asbury Park and surrounding communities. Its mission includes decreasing hunger, providing clothing and offering education and training to improve marketable skills. Dedicated volunteers and professional staff help to provide a food pantry, a clothes closet, computer training, academic remediation, and advise on employability and life skills.

Mr. William Benjamin Ford and Mrs. Willie Mae Taylor Ford, native of Florida, moved to the Jersey Shore in the early 1930s. The Fords were pillars in Bethel AME Church and throughout the community for more than 25 years. Mr. Ford served as Pastor Steward, Class Leader and member of the Lay Organization for many years. He was an employee of the Asbury Park Press for 50 years. Mrs. Ford served Bethel as a Stewardess, Trustee, Missionary, Class Leader, member of the Gospel Chorus and Senior Choir. She operated the Modernistic Beauty Shop in Asbury Park for over 25 years.

The Fords' dedication to serving Bethel lasted throughout their lives, and it still lives through their son, Mr. Greeley Ford. In 1998, Mr. Greeley Ford, who attended Bethel Church as a child and young adult, deeded the property on Atkins Avenue that had been the Modernistic Beauty Shop.

Incorporated in 1879, Bethel Church was one of the first churches in Asbury Park. According to the tradition related by the Church's founders, the organization took place in 1869 under the direction of the Rev. John Cornish. The group had been holding services in a tent at what is now known as the 900 block of Lake Avenue when Mr. James A. Bradley, founder of Asbury Park, proposed a permanent church home and deeded the land, at the southwest corner of Second Avenue and Main Street, in 1893. The congregation worshipped at this site until 1949. The property was sold to a car dealership, who soon demolished the landmark building. The new church home located at the corner of Langford Street and Cookman Avenue, was the former Sons of Israel Synagogue, also a landmark since 1883. Services were held here for the first time on March 6, 1949. The church was renovated in 1954 and again in 1990, while improvements have been made and new amenities have consistently been added throughout the years. In March 1997, the present minister, the Rev. John C. Justice, was appointed to Bethel. Pastor Justice's leadership has seen a continued increase in the number of members of the Congregation and the Fellowship at Bethel.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join with the members of Bethel AME Church and the entire Asbury Park community in welcoming the Ford Center and saluting all those who helped make it a reality.

HONORING THE SAN ANTONIO COMMUNITY HOSPITAL OF UPLAND, CALIFORNIA ON ITS 75TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. GARY G. MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. GARY MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to San Antonio Community Hospital of Upland, California which will be celebrating on August 14, 1999 its 75th year of providing comprehensive, quality health care. From its humble beginnings as a small community hospital in 1907, San Antonio has grown into a predominant health care leader in the western Inland Empire in Southern California.

Today, nearly 2,000 professional, technical and service personnel at their 332-bed facility provide a wide array of medical services, while utilizing the very latest technologies. The 500 plus-member medical staff includes many of the region's leading physicians and specialists who make San Antonio an exceptional hospital. In addition, San Antonio nurses have earned a reputation as compassionate, responsive professionals who continue to meet strict educational and professional standards.

Over the years, San Antonio's logo of a growing plant has become a familiar mark in the community conveying everything the hospital represents. In the hospital's own words, the stalk and leaves express "a feeling of a living, growing organization, consistent with the life mending role the hospital plays. The sturdy central stem, symbolize the elements of the hospital's structure—Trustees, Medical Staff, and Employees. The complete symbol recalls the cooperative efforts needed to accomplish the hospital's primary goal of securing the patient's well being."

At a time when the nation's top concern is achieving quality health care, San Antonio Community Hospital is a shining beacon of excellence in patient care, services, and facilities that respond to consumer and physician needs.

I know my colleagues join me in honoring San Antonio Community Hospital on their 75th Anniversary and wish them many more years of continued success.

FAREWELL TO CONGRESSMAN GEORGE BROWN

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, those of us who served with George Brown are saddened at his passing for we have lost a colleague and friend, a true gentleman who was always honest and thoughtful.

George Brown was a benevolent, yet intense and resolute, advocate for science; a true supporter and friend to the entire scientific community, and a determined fighter for the public good.

He always felt passionately that science could be the basis for progress. George was convinced that the scientific advancements nurtured by Congress would lead to a better world for everyone. And that was his goal for all those many years.

He was consistently dedicated to openness and educating others about science. He was always eager to learn, and to share, the latest perspectives of science and technology.

His commitment to science always rose above partisanship. I know that George shared my satisfaction that the Science Committee has long been considered one of the most bipartisan in Congress. This is a testament to the respect that everyone had for George Brown, and his determined belief that advancing our Nation's scientific research and development is a goal that is not bound by partisan politics.

And as we look up to see his portrait in the committee room, I am pleased that his vision and his legacy will live on among the committee.

I am grateful that I had time to serve with George. We worked together on a number of initiatives over the years, especially technology transfer and competitiveness issues. Once, we were preparing a special video to celebrate a landmark anniversary of an important science organization. George and I went down to the House Recording Studio to tape the video. Everything was all set up and ready to go so that we could go through its rapidly. Our remarks were even ready in the teleprompter. I worked quickly, and finished my segment in one take. However, George just couldn't seem to get it right. Take after take after take, he kept messing up. What should have taken 10 minutes dragged on and on. Finally, after about an hour, we were interrupted by a vote. After the vote, George came back and was finally able to wrap-up the video, but this story underscored that George Brown had difficulty being scripted—in his life, in his political career, and in the way he operated on the Science Committee. George, with his foul cigar and rumpled suit, enjoyed ad libbing, sometimes being irreverent. He had an endearing personality that often came out—even in the most tense of moments.

I will miss George Brown. Science and our nation have lost a fair and just man, a true leader. But we will always remember him as we move forward towards the 21st century and a universe of new scientific advancement. I offer my condolences to his wife Marta Macias Brown and his family.

INTRODUCTION OF BILL TO AMEND CLEAR CREEK COUNTY, COLORADO PUBLIC LAND TRANSFER ACT

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the Commissioners of Clear Creek County, I am today introducing a bill to amend the Clear Creek County, Colorado, Land Transfer Act of 1993.

The bill would amend section 5 of that Act so as to allow Clear Creek County additional time to determine the future disposition of about 6,000 acres of land that was transferred to the county under that section of the 1993 Act.

Under the 1993 Act, the county had 10 years within which to resolve questions related to rights-of-way, mining claims, and trespass situations on the lands covered by that section of the Act and then to decide which parcels to transfer and which to retain. Among other things, the county is working with the Colorado Division of Wildlife on a proposal that would result in some 2,000 acres being transferred to the Division of Wildlife for management as Bighorn Sheep habitat.

The County Commissioners have informed me that this process has taken longer than they anticipated, and that a 10-year extension of time would be helpful to a successful conclusion to this process. The bill I am introducing today responds to that request.

SHIVWITS NATIONAL CONSERVATION AREA

HON. BOB STUMP

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, the Shivwits Plateau is located on the southern end of the Arizona Strip, which borders Arizona, Utah and Nevada. This area's remote and primitive landscape contains a spectacular array of scientific, historic, and cultural resources. This relatively unspoiled area remains a rugged frontier. It is a place where one can view the compatibilities of relics of ancient cultures alongside modern ranching operations.

Mr. Speaker, in November, 1988, Secretary of the Interior Bruce Babbitt first announced his desire to use the Antiquities Act to create a national monument on the Shivwits Plateau in northern Arizona. Since that time, the Secretary's actions clearly indicate that the Department of the Interior has some general environmental concerns over the Shivwits Plateau that they do not believe can be redressed by current law. It is my hope that as we proceed through the hearing process, the Secretary's concerns will be more specifically identified so that they can be addressed legislatively.

Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing the Shivwits Plateau National Conservation Area Establishment Act. My hope in introducing this legislation is to continue a public, legislative dialogue on protecting Shivwits Plateau. While Secretary Babbitt has made some general public comments on the protections he would like to see on the Shivwits Plateau, we have worked for months to translate these comments and concepts into legislative language.

The legislation protects the remoteness, native biodiversity and ecological richness of the Shivwits Plateau, while at the same time increasing public awareness, outdoor recreation use and enjoyment. Equally as important, the bill preserves the ranching lifestyle and maintains the existing, historic and traditional uses of the Shivwits Plateau, goals that the Secretary has expressed in public forums this year.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to discuss several sections of the bill and my intentions for including these sections in the Shivwaits National Conservation Area Establishment Act.

The boundaries of the NCA encompass approximately 570,000 acres, containing 384,000 acres of public lands managed by the Bureau of Land Management, 164,000 acres of public land within the boundaries of the Lake Mead National Recreation, but which are geographically separated from the rest of Lake Mead, 14,000 acres of Arizona State Trust Land, managed by the Arizona State Land Department, and 8,000 acres of privately held land.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the resources of this area within the Shivwits Plateau can best be managed solely by the Bureau of Land Management as a separate, distinct management unit. For this reason, the bill removes lands in the NCA that are currently within the boundaries of the Lake Mead National Recreation Area from the jurisdiction of the National Park Service to control by the Bureau of Land Management. Grazing on this land is currently managed by the Bureau of Land Management, but the land is under the general management of the National Park Service.

The legislation requires that the Bureau of Land Management protect and administer the NCA, and develop a new management plan for the NCA. Through a series of public meetings and closely working with the stakebolders of the region, the Bureau has been managing the region under a combination of resource management and interdisciplinary plans whose results have been lauded by all users, as well as the Secretary of the Interior. The current plans provide a significant amount of flexibility for the management of the Shivwits Plateau, and have continually been developed and refined over the past several years. Their goals and objectives reflect the varied interests of the Arizona Strip, including those of conservationists, the Federal government, local governments, recreationists, permittees and land owners, and would, I believe, accommodate the interests of the Secretary to protect the area for the future. For that reason, the bill directs the Bureau to use existing plans, specifically the goals and objectives, as a foundation for developing a management plan for the new NCA.

The legislation also establishes the Shivwits Plateau National Conservation Area Advisory Committee. The committee is designed to be diverse, yet well balanced, with the purpose of advising the Secretary on the preparation and implementation of the management plan.

Mr. Speaker, the Secretary, during his numerous visits to Arizona, has expressed his desire to permit the continuation of valid existing uses. Therefore, the bill permits the continuation of existing authorized uses, within the framework and restrictions of the current management plans. Hunting, fishing and trapping will continue to be regulated by the State of Arizona, State and private landowners will continue to have reasonable access to their land and existing roads and trails on public and private lands will continue to be maintained. In addition, grazing will be allowed to continue, within the goals and objectives of the management plan, and permittees will be able to maintain and improve necessary structures and water tanks within their allotments. Finally, local governments and private parties will continue to have helicopter and aircraft excess to the Arizona Strip.

Mr. Speaker, this bill establishes that land within the boundaries of the NCA can only be acquired from willing sellers. The Secretary is also required to make a diligent effort to acquire private lands, subsurface rights and mining claims within the NCA. The legislation further guarantees that land values will not be affected by the NCA designation and fair market value will be paid for land acquisitions.

The Shivwits National Conservation Area Establishment Act establishes the framework for withdrawing lands within the NCA from mineral entry and exploration. The bill requires the Secretary to assess the oil, gas and other mineral potential in the NCA no later than two years after the enactment of this legislation. The mineral assessment will be exchanged with the State and subject to a peer review by the Arizona State Department of Mines and Minerals. Additionally, the Secretary cannot make, modify or extend any mineral withdrawal authorized by the Federal Lands Management Policy Act within the boundaries of the NCA after January 1, 1999. If the Secretary withdraws the land, all lands and minerals within the NCA will be available for mineral leasing, under the Mineral Leasing Act. Language in the legislation specifies that the establishment of the NCA will not affect the value of subsurface mineral rights.

Mr. Speaker, the bill also requires the Secretary to develop and implement forest restoration projects and provide alternative grazing allotments to permittees affected by restoration projects. The legislation places a three years time limit on the amount of time a restoration project may impact grazing allotment. Current methods used to control plant growth will continue to be permitted in the Shivwits NCA.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, water rights are a source of contention in the West, and I have ensured in my bill that existing water rights within the NCA are not affected by this designation and that no new water rights will be created.

The bill also places requirements on the Secretary to improve and maintain specified roads, within the NCA, as all-weather roads. The Secretary is also required to conduct a survey of the conservation area, noting all sites of archaeological, historical or scientific interest.

Mr. Speaker, the bill also initiates a framework necessary for local communities to develop the infrastructure to support this conservation area. This bill authorizes the Secretary to implement the recommendations contained in the April 1999 report of the Sonoran Institute. This report detailed three major goals that must be accomplished to ensure the long-term health of the local communities and the surrounding public lands. These three goals include building local and agency capacity for partnerships, building local entrepreneurial capacity and restoring landscape health through local efforts. Finally, this bill conveys to Colorado City, Arizona, Fredonia, Arizona, Mohave County Arizona and the Kaibab Band of Paiute Indians certain federal lands needed to handle the increased visitor ship of the Shivwits Plateau.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope, in introducing this legislation, that we send a strong message to the Secretary of the Interior and the President, indicating Congress' desire to work on a legislative proposal to address the needs of the Shivwits Plateau.

TRIBUTE TO AMALIA DISTENFELD

HON. CAROLYN McCARTHY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mrs. McCARTHY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the inspiring matriarch of an American family. Amalia Distenfeld, Born in Lvov, Poland, in August 1919, came to this country in 1947, to start a new life. She and her husband, the late Dr. Menachem Distenfeld, were among a handful of survivors of two very extensive and well-known families that perished in the Holocaust.

Amalia is living testimony to her own courage and the possibilities of the American dream. Hard work, coupled with purpose, optimism and an unfailing dedication to family allowed her to see children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren thrive in this country of freedom. She has dedicated her life to promoting educational and moral values that have helped guide and sustain her family.

The same tenacity that allowed Amalia and Menachem to survive the nightmare of the Holocaust enabled this young couple to surmount the struggle of a new beginning in New York, devoid of resources, in a strange environment with three children. Amalia took in boarders, cooked and cleaned for them, while her husband learned the language of their new country, then studied and reestablished himself as a physician. Her strength, her faith in God and her refusal to be crushed by the past, allowed for a quick integration into American life. Amalia worked with Menachem in their Queens, New York, office to establish a medical practice whose hallmark was selfless public service to the community at large, including a great many fellow survivors. Unfortunately, just as life's promises were being realized, she was left a young widow. Without her beloved Menachem, Amalia natural exuberance and steadfast commitment to family has sustained her over the last 33 years. She took on new challenges and new careers of public service, first in the American Heart Association and then the American Lung Association, where she worked well into her late seventies.

Perhaps Amalia's greatest joy is derived from the achievements of her children and grandchildren in areas of education, technology, law, medicine, and business. She cherishes her time with them as they do with her. Mr. Speaker, Amalia is a living lesson of courage, hope and optimism to all who know her. Her children's fidelity to Amalia's religious legacy and their appreciation for America's blessings were learned at her knee.

I ask my colleagues in the United States Congress to join me in wishing Amalia Distenfeld good health and happiness on the occasion of her 80th birthday, with many wonderful and blessed years to come.

GENE WISNER

HON. GARY G. MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. GARY MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Gene Wisner, who will be retiring from the Yorba Linda City Council in California. Mr. Wisner served on the City Council from January 3, 1983 to November 1992 and was elected again in November of 1994. He has twice served his community honorably as Mayor, as well as represented his city: as Vice Chairman and Chairman of the Eastern/Foothill Transportation Corridor Agency; a member of the Budget & Finance Committee on the Transportation Corridor Agency; a members of the City Audit Committee; the League of California Cities; National League of Cities; Orange County Fire Authority; and the Orange County Sanitation District. He also served as city representative to the Yorba Linda Water District and the Yorba Linda Chamber of Commerce.

While serving as a member of the City Council, Gene Wisner worked toward many beneficial projects for Yorba Linda including the development of the Richard Nixon Library and Birthplace, an expansive city park system, city recreational facilities, the Community Center/Senior Citizen Facility, and the Casa Loma Field House. Mr. Wisner is to be congratulated for his service to the community, not only as a Council Member, but as an active supporter of community groups such as the Boy Scouts of America, the Y.M.C.A. and local youth sports programs.

It is with extreme pleasure that I wish the best for Mr. Wisner in his retirement from the Yorba Linda City Council.

CONGRATULATIONS VERA TRINCHERO TORRES

HON. MIKE THOMPSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. THOMPSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my sincere congratulations to a dear friend, Ms. Vera Trinchero Torres, who has been named the 1999 Citizen of the Year by the St. Helena Chamber of Commerce.

A co-owner of the famous Sutter Home Winery and mother of two, Vera dedicates most of her free time to charitable work for the community of the Napa Valley.

Although a New Yorker by birth, Vera moved to the Napa Valley at age ten and has been a resident of the area ever since. As a child, she and her older brother, Bob, helped out in the winery after school and on weekends. Vera worked on the bottling line and swept up, all the while looking after her little brother, Roger.

After graduating from St. Helena High School, Vera began a 24-year career as a legal secretary. In fact, I'm proud to say she was the mainstay in the law office of my uncle, former Judge Lowell Palmer. In 1979, as Sutter Home began its transformation from a small mom-and-pop operation to a large, modern winery, Vera took on the responsibility of running the office full-time.

Today, Vera oversees company profit sharing and pension plans for Sutter Home's 450 employees and serves as the family-run corporation's secretary. She also manages the company's extensive charitable activities, which amount to several hundred thousand dollars each year. In addition, Vera is an active supporter of numerous local youth groups, including the St. Helena Boys and Girls Club.

In 1996, in recognition of her philanthropic efforts and service to the community, Vera was named, by me, Woman of the Year for the 2nd District of the California State Senate.

The St. Helena Citizen of the Year Award is one more honor of many to come for this wonderful neighbor, great friend, and tremendous asset to our community.

Once again, I offer my congratulations to Vera and to her family.

CENTRAL NEW JERSEY RECOGNIZES THELMA AND HARRY ZALEWITZ

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Thelma and Harry Zalewitz, who will be honored this weekend by the State of Israel Bonds with the Independent Issue Award for their contributions to the Jewish community in America over the last 50 years. Together they have served on a wide variety of committees, held countless leadership positions, and tirelessly advocated the importance of public service and "giving back" to the community.

Both Thelma and Harry Zalewitz were born in the United States to parents who had emigrated from Eastern Europe. Their families had settled in America with the hope of escaping persecution and reaching toward freedom and the ability to create a better life. They met in Paterson, NJ, and were married in 1946 after Harry returned from World War II. Ten years later, the couple moved with their three children to Verona, NJ, where they joined and immediately became involved in the Jewish Community Center of Verona.

Within a short time, both Harry and Thelma were serving on the Synagogue's Board and holding elected positions. Harry was chosen as Synagogue President and Thelma as Executive Secretary to the Board of Directors. Harry also held the position of co-chairman of the Verona-Cedar Grove campaign of the Jewish Federation. Over the years, the couple has actively participated in the development and growth of the Jewish Community Center of Concordia. Harry served as Vice President for the center, and lent his expertise as a member of the Board of the Jewish Federation of Greater Middlesex County. Their gratitude for the quality of life they have been privileged to experience has directed them to give both time and resources to insure that same quality of life for all Jewish people.

Today, Harry and Thelma continue to lead their local Jewish community. Thelma currently serves the important role of writing the Yartzeits for the Jewish Congregation of Concordia, transposing the Hebrew dates to the Gregorian calendar dates. They also support the State of Israel through investment in the Israel Bonds campaign.

Thelma and Harry have willingly given themselves to the community. I urge my fellow representatives to join me in recognizing this exceptional couple.

RURAL EDUCATION INITIATIVE

HON. EARL POMEROY

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to join my distinguished colleague Congressman BARRETT of Nebraska, along with Representatives PETRI, BALDACCI, and THUNE, in introducing the Rural Education Initiative. This legislation will provide smaller rural school districts across the country with the flexibility and funding they need to provide a quality education for our children.

A strong investment in the public education system is critical to our nation's future. In recent years, Congress has recognized that reality by increasing federal support for education. These funds are currently disproportionately channeled to larger school districts. Many small and rural school districts have simply fallen through the cracks. Small school districts, including many in North Dakota, have had to forgo federal dollars because they lack the personnel and the resources to apply for competitive grants. Also, due to low enrollment and a lack of special categories of students in these schools, single formula grants fail to provide sufficient revenue to fund any one significant project. As currently structured, these federal grant programs fail to meet the needs of rural school districts.

To address the unique circumstances of smaller rural schools, the Rural Education Initiative would allow school districts with fewer than 600 students to combine funds from four distinct federal programs and provide additional funds based on enrollment. In North Dakota, Belfield Public School District, for example, which has an enrollment of 310 students, would receive a minimum grant of $50,000 under this legislation. By combining and increasing federal funds to rural districts like Belfield, this legislation would give school administrators the resources and flexibility they need to support local educational priorities.

Mr. Chairman, as Congress moves forward with the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA), we can not overlook our small and rural school districts. Thirty-five percent of all school districts in the United States and 86 percent of school districts in North Dakota have fewer than 600 students, and are currently struggling to make ends meet. The Rural Education Initiative would take a strong step forward by leveling the playing field for rural school districts, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

CLEVELAND CLINIC CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL FOR REHABILITATION

HON. STEPHANIE TUBBS JONES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I announce the renaming of Health Hill Hospital for Children to the Cleveland Clinic Children's Hospital for Rehabilitation.

Since 1998, Health Hill Hospital for Children has been part of the Cleveland Clinic Health System. Devoted entirely to pediatric development, Health Hill has one of the largest teams of pediatric therapists in the nation. in addition to being one of the world's preeminent medical research and educational facilities, the Cleveland Clinic Health System is northeast Ohio's foremost provider of comprehensive medical and rehabilitative services to children requiring long-term treatment. Not only does the hospital's pediatric staff provide excellent care to critically ill and disabled children, but they do so in a comforting and caring environment that eases the children's fears and worries.

The primary goal for Health Hill is to create a more independent lifestyle for these children and their families. For example, by providing unique programs, like the Day Hospital Program, children can receive daily intensive therapy without having to be hospitalized. Day Hospital patients receive therapy, nursing and medical care, yet are able to return home to their families each evening and weekend. Providing patients with the opportunity to maintain their routines and home lives is so important in making a sick child feel as "normal" as possible. The hospital serves children with a variety of illnesses, ranging from spinal cord and head injuries, respiratory problems, feeding disorders, and burns to chronic or congenital medical conditions.

Mr. Speaker, Health Hill Hospital has proven to be more than just a "hospital." Their commitment to providing the highest standards of medical services for special needs children is why they continue to be a shining example of one of the best children's specialty hospitals. Cleveland Clinic Children's Hospital for Rehabilitation is affiliated with the renowned Cleveland Clinic Foundation, ranked among the ten best hospitals in the nation by U.S. News and World Report's annual guide to "America's Best Hospitals." It is exciting to see the resources of this prestigious hospital devoted to the care of children.

Again, I am honored to announce the Cleveland Clinic Children's Hospital for Rehabilitation's new designation, and commend the Foundation's outstanding achievements throughout the past 78 years.

REMEMBERING AND HONORING THE SERVICE OF JAMES FARMER

HON. MAX SANDLIN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a recipient of the Presidential Medal of Honor, an honored American, and a true leader. When we think of the civil rights movement, certain names often come to mind. The names Martin Luther King and Rosa Parks are easy to remember, but I think of a man who was born in the town I call home: Marshall, Texas.

This man was a behind-the-scenes organizer. He was the last living member of the "Big Four" who shaped the civil rights movement in the mid 1950s and 1960s. He founded the Congress of Racial Equality in the 1940s. He organized countless demonstrations and sit-ins. He directed the Freedom Rides to desegregate interstate bus stations in the South in 1961. He served with the NAACP, the US Department of Health, Education and Welfare and taught at several colleges. He was awarded over 22 honorary doctorates, and in 1998, he earned the Presidential Medal of Freedom. This man was James Farmer.

Mr. Farmer was the son of a Methodist minister and professor of Theology at Wiley College. At 14, on a full scholarship, he went to Wiley College to study medicine only to find that he could not stand the sight of blood. Perhaps more in line with his calling, Mr. Farmer left medicine behind to study religion at Howard University, where he became acquainted with the civil disobedience methods employed by Ghandi. However, upon graduation, he found that he had no desire to minister in a church that actively practiced segregation. It was this realization that pushed him into civil rights activism.

In 1942, he founded the Congress of Racial Equality in Chicago, and in 1947, he held the first Freedom Ride. He was beaten, arrested, and served time in prison. He was encouraged to let things settle down in the South, to let them cool off. Mr. Farmer, however, refused to back down. In 1963 he was attacked at a demonstration he had organized in Louisiana. State troopers came after him with guns, cattle prods, and tear gas, but he escaped with the help of a funeral director who drove him through the police cordon in a hearse. Although he had planned to attend the March On Washington, he was arrested in Louisiana for disturbing the peace and had to settle for watching Martin Luther King make him famous "I Have a Dream" speech on the television.

After the leadership of the Congress of Racial Equality changed hands, he surprised some civil rights leaders by joining the Nixon administration as an assistant secretary in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. He knew that if African Americans were ever to have any say in national policy on race, then they had to be active in the government. Mr. Farmer recognized the potential in the position and used it to persuade the administration to approve funds for the Head Start program in Southern States. His response to those who thought he was abandoning the movement was that he saw himself as a bridge. "I lived in two worlds. One was the volatile and explosive one of the new black Jacobins and the other was the sophisticated and genteel world of the white and black liberal establishment. As a bridge, I was called on by each side for help in contacting the other."

Indeed, Mr. Farmer's concept of two worlds was what fueled his passion for equality. He often reminisced of his childhood before and after he became aware of discrimination. Growing up around colleges, he was sheltered from much of the racism that surrounded him. It wasn't until he discovered that he couldn't go wherever he wanted that he even realized he was any different from others.

At three years old, what he wanted was a soda, not social change. Given his young age and his sheltered upbringing, he couldn't understand why he couldn't use the money his father had given him to go and buy one at the drug store on the way home. He cried and pleaded to no avail. Finally his mother told him he couldn't buy a soda because it was a "whites-only" drug store, and he wasn't allowed to enter. Then she cried. And that was the day that young Mr. Farmer became determined to do something about it. He vowed to destroy segregation.

It was this same determination that got him through sitting in the "buzzard's roost," the segregated balcony in the cinema near Wiley College. And it was this same determination that put him on board the Freedom Ride to Jackson, Mississippi. He later called his organization of the Freedom Ride his proudest achievement.

Mr. Farmer had many achievements of which to be proud. I consider it an honor to have been a part of the driving force behind his most recent accomplishment which occurred just last year. On January 15, 1998, President Clinton awarded James Farmer the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the highest civilian honor the United States of America gives. For Mr. Farmer, it was the crowning moment on a rich past of activism and determination. "It's a vindication, an acknowledgment at long last. I'm grateful it came before I died." At 79, Mr. Farmer finally received his soda.

As we celebrate the life of James Farmer, let us remember one of his last lessons to us all. He said that we have beaten segregation, we have beaten Jim Crow. Now we have to beat racism, and it's going to take all of us to do it.

JOHN MICHAEL HURLEY

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to a long time friend, John Michael Hurley of my district. John passed from this life on June 10, 1999.

John made his career in public service, first in the Armed Forces where he served in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps Reserves, and Air Force. Upon his retirement from the Air Force he began a career with the City of Toledo's Streets, Bridges & Harbors Division until his 1992 retirement. While employed with the city, he rose to the top leadership post of AFSCME Local 7. He worked for the union as steward, divisional steward, chief steward, and president. He also served AFSCME Ohio Council 8 as regional vice president, and was a board member of Ohio's Public Employees Retirement System. Throughout that service, the quality guarded the hard fought rights of working people throughout our community and state.

In addition to his civil service, John was also an active member of local veterans organizations, belonging to the Veterans of Foreign Wars Northwood Post #2984 and American Legion Conn Weisenberger Post #587. Rounding out his service to community and country, John coached Toledo's North End Lagrange Lions Baseball Team.

A family man, John was the proud father of Angela, Laura, Lillian, Nicole, Patrick, Andrew, David, and Kelly, and doting grandfather to 21 grandchildren. Our condolences to them, his wife Joanne, and his sisters and brothers. May they gain some small comfort in knowing the spirit and fire of John Hurley is carried through in each of them. The people of our community have been touched with his strength and kindness and our nation expresses its gratitude for his service to our country.

WEKIVA WILD AND SCENIC RIVER ACT OF 1999

HON. BILL McCOLLUM

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation, the Wekiva Wild and Scenic River Act of 1999, designating the Wekiva River and its tributaries of Rock Springs Run and Seminole Creek for inclusion in the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System.

In the 104th Congress, legislation was signed into law to authorize a study of the Wekiva River by the Department of Interior to determine whether it is eligible and suitable for inclusion in the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System. The National Parks Service recently completed this study and concluded that the Wekiva River system is an excellent candidate for receiving this designation.

This legislation would allow the Wekiva River and its tributaries to join the Loxahatchee as Florida's second river to receive this designation. The Wekiva Wild and Scenic River Act of 1999 provides Congressional designation of 41.6 miles of eligible and suitable portions of the Wekiva River, Rock Springs Run, Seminole Creek, and Black Water Creek with State management and the establishment of a cooridinated Federal, State, and local management committee (Alternative C of the study). As the report states, the Wekiva River area provides "outstanding remarkable resources" which makes it eligible for this national designation.

For more than 30 years, the National Wild and Scenic Rivers Act has been safeguarding some of our most precious rivers across the country. In October of 1968, the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act pronounced that certain selected rivers of the nation which possess outstandingly remarkable scenic, recreational, geologic, fish and wildlife, historic, cultural or other similar values, shall be preserved in free-flowing condition, and that they shall be protected for the benefit and enjoyment of present and future generations. Designated rivers receive protection to preserve their free-flowing condition, to protect the water quality and to fulfill other vital national conservation purposes.

Furthermore, this legislation recognizes the efforts that have been initiated at the local and state level through the local coordinated management committee. This committee will be responsible for determining and implementing the comprehensive management plan for the Wekiva River under this designation and will be composed of a representative from each of the following agencies: Department of Interior, through the National Park Service; The East Central Florida Regional Planning Council; The Florida Department of Enviromental Protection, Wekiva River GEOPark; The Florida Department of Environmental Protection, Wekiva River Aquatic Preserve; The Florida Department of Environmental Protection, Office of Ecosystem Planning and Coordination; The Florida Department of Agriculture and Community Affairs, Seminole State Forest; The Florida Audubon Society; The Friends of the Wekiva; The Lake County Water Authority; The Lake County Planning Department; The Orange County Parks and Recreational Department; The Seminole County Planning Department; The St. Johns River Management District; and The Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission.

Floridians are blessed with some of the most rich and engaging natural resources in the world. Every year thousands of people come to Florida to enjoy our rivers and oceans. Located in Central Florida, the Wekiva River Basin is a complex ecological system of rivers, springs, lakes, and streams with many indigenous varieties of vegetation and wildlife which are dependent on this water system. Included in this area are several distinct recreational, natural, historic and cultural resources that make the Wekiva River an excellent addition to the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System, and it is great pride that I introduce this legislation for consideration before this body.

IN MEMORY OF CHARLES BRADLEY EARNEST

HON. JOHN L. MICA

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor to pay tribute to a neighbor, friend and young man who gave his life in service to his country. Brad Earnest, as he was affectionately called, died on August 2, 1999 in Florida.

Brad was critically injured in a helicopter crash as he served in the 10th Special Forces of the United States Army. In the nine years since that accident Brad remained in a coma.

He is survived by his mother, Minna H. Earnest, who deserves the gratitude, great respect and deepest sympathy of every member of Congress and all Americans.

Not only did Minna Earnest lose her son she also sacrificed her husband to our nation when he was killed in Vietnam. What greater heartbreak could one family, one wife and mother endure for the sake of her country?

My last memories of Brad recall him proudly telling me of his Army assignment and his work in service to our country. Most of all we will miss his smile but always remember and celebrate his life.

Brad was a graduate of Winter Park High School in Winter Park, Florida. He attended Auburn University in Alabama where he was a member of Theta Chi Fraternity.

Brad was born in Portsmouth, Virginia on October 16, 1962 and will be laid to rest in Opelika, Alabama.

I know the United States House of Representatives and every Member of Congress extend our deepest sympathy to Brad's mother, Minna H. Earnest, and to his brother, Bryan H. Earnest of Maitland, Florida, and to his paternal grandmother, Margaret Earnest of Opelika, Alabama.

TRIBUTE TO WILLIE MORRIS

HON. CHARLES W "CHIP" PICKERING

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. PICKERING. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Willie Morris—the great Mississippi writer who dedicated a lifetime to exploring what it means to be a Southerner, and showing what it means to be a friend. And today many friends and admirers are grieving over his death earlier this week.

Everyone who loved Willie and cared for his work understands what a terrible loss this is. In his own unique way, he touched countless souls with his emotional honesty and boyish sense of humor. His perspective was a refreshing retreat from the culture of cynicism that poisons our society, and corrodes our democracy.

William Morris was an American original, and a Mississippi legend. And, the truth is, it's hard to imagine Mississippi without Willie Morris.

Willie grew up in Yazoo City, Mississippi, a small town on the edge of the Delta, and went on to study at the University of Texas, where he was awarded a Rhodes Scholarship.

At 32, he became the youngest editor-in-chief of Harper's magazine in New York City. In the 1980s he came back to his native Mississippi to teach writing at Ole Miss and to write books.

Willie Morris wrote about the little things that make small-town life special—like football games, dogs, and hole-in-the-wall restaurants. He also wrote about the big things—like faith, family and friendship.

But Willie never shied away from putting these heart-warming descriptions in the context of the South's racial history, or revealing the challenges of laying down its burden.

He did this magnificently, I felt, in "The Courting of Marcus Dupree"—a story about how the outstanding high school football star helped breakdown long-held hostilities between whites and blacks in Philadelphia, Mississippi.

In this book and others, Willie acknowledged the progress made toward racial harmony in Mississippi and across America.

As someone who lived through the transition from the Old South to the New South, he had seen dramatic change in his homeland. But one way or another, he always found a way to say: "We must do better."

Another favorite theme of Willie's was dogs. "Every little boy ought to have a dog," he once said. In My Dog Skip and North Toward Home, he told some of the best dog stories I've ever heard, stories that inspire the warmest memories of the dogs of our own childhood. Many are so good they make you wish you had lived them yourself—like the time at age 12 when he taught his English Fox Terrier, Skip, how to drive a car:

"I would get the dog to prop himself against the steering wheel," he writes, "his black head peering out the windshield, while I crouched out of sight under the dashboard. Slowing the care to ten or fifteen, I would guide the steering wheel with my right hand while Skip, with his paws, kept it steady. As we drove by the Blue-Front Café, I could hear one of the (old) men shout: 'Look at that ol' dog drivin' a car!' "

Willie Morris loved life and all things in it. And most of all, he loved making friends and encouraging others.

Several years ago, a young writer friend of mine from Texas met Willie and after their meeting sent Willie an essay he had been working on. Days later my friend received his essay, with excellent edits, and a hand-written note from Willie that said: "You're a damn fine writer. Keep the faith, my friend!"

That letter now hangs framed, on my friend's wall, as a medal of encouragement.

Mark Twain once said: "the great people in life are the ones that tell others that they, too, can be great." Willie Morris was one of those great people. He was the kind of guy that once he made friends with you, he was a friend for life. Our good friend Willie Morris has gone away, but his beautiful words and sweet spirit will live on forever and ever.

Our thoughts and prayers are with his wife, Joanne Prichard, and his son, David Rae, in this difficult time.

H.R. 2116—VETERANS' MILLENNIUM HEALTH CARE ACT

HON. BOB FILNER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, and colleagues, I rise in support of the Veterans' Millennium Health Care Act. This bill improves the VA health care system in many ways—it will extend long term care and emergency care services—provide sexual trauma counseling—and will give the VA access to a portion, if funds are recovered from tobacco companies, to compromise for its costs of tobacco-related illnesses.

I am especially pleased that this legislation ensures that the Veterans Administration (VA) will work with licensed doctors of chiropractic care to develop a policy to provide veterans with access to chiropractic services. Even though chiropractic is the most widespread of the complementary approaches to medicine in the United States, serving roughly 27 million patients—and even though Congress has recognized chiropractic care in the other areas of the federal health care system (Medicare, Medicaid, and federal workers compensation), VA has chosen not to make chiropractic routinely available to veterans. This bill changes that!

As a Member representing a portion of San Diego County, I am also pleased that H.R. 2116 includes a biomedical research facility for the VA San Diego Healthcare System to accommodate current and pending research programs on diabetes, immunology, hypertension, Parkinson's Disease, AIDS, and memory.

I encourage my colleagues to support and vote in favor of the Veterans' Millennium Health Care Act.

PRAISING STATE REPRESENTATIVE BILL COLLIER'S PUBLIC SERVICE

HON. JOHN S. TANNER

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. TANNER. Mr. Speaker, first and foremost William H. "Bill" Collier is a gentleman who represents the finest traditions of public service and generosity that so many Tennesseans hold dear.

I was privileged to serve in the Tennessee state legislature with Rep. Bill Collier for four years from 1984 to 1988. For six years after I was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives, I represented several communities that also had the good fortune to be represented by Bill Collier during his service in the state legislature.

He retired from the state legislature in 1994 after a distinguished career dedicated to public service on behalf of the people of Humphreys and Benton Counties.

Just last month, a section of Highway 70 in New Johnsonville was named for Bill Collier. That action was not only fitting, but also well deserved for a man who was committed to public service. It doesn't hurt that the bypass at Waverly was built largely because of his perseverance.

And that's not all that can be said about Bill. He is also one of the finest auctioneers Middle Tennessee has known.

Bill Collier, his wife, Patricia, their three children and two grandchildren are a tribute to the values we as Tennesseans consider so important and we wish him the best.

An article published in the News-Democrat in Waverly under the headline "Collier Looks Back at His Career" is printed below in honor of Bill's public service and dedication to his family.

[From the Waverly (TN) New Democrat, July 9, 1999]

COLLIER LOOKS BACK AT HIS CAREER

(By Grey Collier)

Work to become, not to acquire.

This quote by Elbert Hubbard in Monday's Tennessean might be best exemplified by Humphreys County native William H. (Bill) Collier.

Collier, who last weekend was honored by having a section of the newly-widened Highway 70 in New Johnsnville named for him, has long worked for the good of his home county.

Collier promised to try and get the bypass in Waverly when he ran for the state representative in 1984.

"We got the first three phases in Waverly funded," Collier said.

"Then we realized we needed to get it through New Johnsonville."

Upon entering his first term in the state legislature, Collier went to bat for the county immediately.

"I was in a meeting and an aide come to ask if he could do anything for us," Collier said. "I told him I wanted an appointment with Gov. (Lamar) Alexander."

At the time, there was a recession going on and Consolidated Aluminum had closed. "I told him about the shape Humphreys County was in and that we needed a bypass to bring in business," Collier said.

"He told me I was the first freshman (new representative) who spoke with him so candidly and he was going to help me," he said.

Soon after, Alexander made a visit to the county and plans were announced for the bypass.

"Our last conversation before (Alexander) left office was about the bypass," Collier said. "He said, 'Bill, the money is in the budget for the bypass, don't let anything happen to it'."

Collier was successful in getting on the transportation finance ways and means committee which was also a big help in getting the bypass financed and built.

"John Bragg was the committee chairman and told me he had heard all he wanted to about 'that bypass'," Collier said. "I told him he would stop hearing about it when it was built."

The completion of the by-pass is one of Collier's favorite accomplishments, but there are others as well.

He acquired a $250,000 grant for factory building in the Waverly Industrial Park and a $50,000 grant for a feasibility study of the state park in New Johnsonville.

"Those are the three things I am most proud of," Collier said. "But I have to attribute all of my accomplishments to the good help I had from local leaders and other politicians—especially Sen. Ben. Riley Darnell."

Collier did not run for reelection in 1994 due to health reasons. That ended his 10 year tenure in the legislature and a 22 year political career.

A Humphreys County native, Collier was born in the Big Richland community. He was employed with TVA for 10 years as an iron worker and foreman.

In 1957 he attended Reppert Auction School and began working part time as an auctioneer and real estate agent.

"I felt TVA and went full time as an auctioneer and real estate agent in 1960," he said.

His office was located on Main Street. At that time there was only one other real estate office in Waverly. How times change.

Since then he has not only conducted hundreds of auctions, but also took part in training a few.

"Governor Buford Ellington appointed me to the auction commission over west and part of middle Tennessee for five years," Collier said.

He was also an instructor for five years with the Nashville Auction School.

"I have five auctioneers at Collier Realty and have taken an active part in training all of them," he said.

He worked alone for three years before Gene Trotter came in as an auctioneer and Shirley Rochelle as a real estate agent. Nancy Trollinger worked as Collier's secretary for 20 years.

When he entered the legislature he took on Kenneth Dreaden as a partner so that he could devote more time to his political office.

In 1967, Collier married Patricia Fowlkes Collier. They have three children, Greg Gunn of New Johnsonville, Allyson Haggard of Okeechobee, FL, and Daniel Collier of Waverly.

He has two grandchildren, Connor Gunn, 6, and Mollie Collier, 3.

These days you are most likely able to catch him at the office where he still goes daily. Otherwise, he is likely to be sitting on the front porch swing, sharing Diet Coke and peanuts with his granddaughter.

IN RECOGNITION OF DEDICATED SERVICE BY MR. ROBERT TOBIAS

SPEECH OF

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate Robert Tobias on his outstanding service as President of the National President of the National Treasury Employees Union and wish him continued success as he engages in other professional challenges. I am proud to count Bob as my constituent and I thank him for the assistance he has given me on behalf of federal employees.

During the past 31 years that he has spent with the NTEU, Bob has been an effective advocate of federal employees, working his way up from staff attorney, to general counsel, to executive vice president, and finally, in 1983, to National President. Over these 31 years, NTEU has grown from 20,000 members in one agency to 155,000 members in 22 agencies.

During his impressive career, Bob received numerous Presidential appointments and awards: President Bush appointed him to the Federal Employees Salary Council; and President Clinton appointed him to both the National Partnership Council and the Commission to Restructure the IRS.

Bob also has been at the forefront of recent government reform efforts through his membership in the National Commission on Restructuring the IRS. The Commission's work was the basis for the most far-reaching changes in the agency in nearly 50 years. Currently, he has been nominated to serve on the IRS Oversight Board and is awaiting Senate confirmation.

Bob's leadership style is firm but fair, and he is on the cutting edge of new developments in labor relations. I have worked personally with Bob on many issues, and often times we met with great success.

For example:

We collaborated on establishing the Fair Share formula, which prevented a large FEHBP monthly premium increase, thereby insulating federal employees and retirees from the full rise in health care premiums.

We worked to strike Medical Savings Accounts as an FEHBP option MSA's would have resulted in "cherry picking," and increased FEHBP premiums by siphoning off relatively healthy enrolles into catastrophic/MSA plans.

Bob's expertise on these issues was invaluable.

A glimpse into some of his other accomplishments further illuminates the reasons why Bob is such a great source of information and expertise. Through collective bargaining, Bob reached important agreements regarding: Quality of work life; developing the first national alternative work schedule; and child care facilities.

Bob was also instrumental in the Hatch Act reform, which allows federal employees to exercise their rights to participate in political activity.

Bob's work does not stop with advocacy on behalf of the NTEU. All federal employees benefit from his efforts, at the bargaining table and in the courtroom. He has used litigation to protect federal employee rights in a number of landmark cases. For example:

Bob worked on a Supreme Court victory just this year that established the right of federal employees and their collective bargaining representatives to initiate midterm bargaining;

Bob successfully sued Presidents Nixon in 1975 and Reagan in 1981 to obtain back pay for federal employees; and

Bob achieved a federal court victory that gave federal employees the right to engage in informational picketing.

I wish Bob the best of luck in his teaching and writing endeavors. His recommendation for the next National President, NTEU Executive Vice President Colleen Kelly, has a tough act to follow. The wonderful staff at NTEU will ease her transition, while Bob's legacy will benefit federal employees for generations. I heartily thank Bob for his devotion and service to civil servants. Shakespeare could have had Bob Tobias in mind when he wrote in Henry VIII: "The force of his own merit makes his way."

DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2000

SPEECH OF

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 4, 1999

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2670) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, and for other purposes:

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Chairman, five years ago next month, Congress passed and the President signed into law the most comprehensive piece of Federal anti-crime legislation in history. Now, the Majority seems intent on slashing funding for the centerpiece of that bill—the COPS program. In that time, COPS has provided law enforcement agencies in my district and across the nation with critical funding to fight and prevent crime. In my district, communities in Hunterdon, Monmouth, Mercer, Middlesex, and Somerset counties have received more than $14 million to fund the addition of 290 officers to the beat.

The creation of the COPS program was a breakthrough in law enforcement. By funding additional officers, critical technologies, and valuable training, COPS has been a catalyst for the revolutionary shift to community policing.

COPS and community policing have put us on the right track. Crime is at its lowest level in more than a quarter of a century. Violent crime is at a 27 year low. the murder rate is lower than it has been in three decades. And the police chiefs and sheriffs in my district consistently tell me that we could have never achieved this much without the additional officers and technology funded under the COPS program.

In May, COPS provided for the 100,000th officer and some think this means that we can pat ourselves on the back and declare victory. I disagree.

Crime is still too high. While we have made progress, violent crime is still six times higher than it was in 1962. And more than 18,000 people were murdered in the U.S. last year. We can and must do more.

That is why I support continuing the COPS program to add 30,000 to 50,000 more officers to the street. Every major law enforcement group, as well as the U.S. Conference of Mayors and the National League of Cities support this proposal.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot afford to play politics with the safety of our communities. Congress should reauthorize and fully fund the COPS program.

INTRODUCTION OF HEALTHY START LEGISLATION

HON. ELIJAH E. CUMMINGS

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak in support of our nation's infants and their mothers.

As a parent, I understand that children flourish in our society when they have a healthy environment to develop and learn. But most importantly, they must have a healthy start at life.

Sadly, however, four babies die each hour and 33,000 babies die each year in the U.S. before they are a year old.

In 1992, 17 out of 1,000 babies born in my home district of Baltimore City did not live to see their first birthdays. In the most deprived neighborhoods of our city, that rate was 20 out of 1,000!

Poor women were effectively shut out of affordable prenatal care and often had children who were severely underweight or born with birth defects that could have easily been prevented through adequate medical treatment.

However, our city's infant mortality rate has dropped 31 percent since the implementation of Healthy Start. In fact, in the two neighborhoods where Baltimore's Healthy Start Centers are located and easily accessible, the rate has been slashed a staggering 61% from earlier rates. The national infant mortality rate is also at a historic low of 7.1 deaths per 1,000 live births in 1997, and the proportion of mothers getting early prenatal care is at a record high of 82 percent.

Healthy Start is a phenomenal program that empowers urban communities to fully address the medical, behavioral, cultural, and social service needs of women and their infants by building strong coalitions and commitment among families, volunteers, the private sector, and health care and social service providers.

I have seen the difference this program has made in saving the lives of our children and their parents, as well as transforming the lives of the men and women who work for the program. The employees and volunteers have developed invaluable skills and a sense of pride in their service to nurture families.

As such, I will reintroduce legislation that I sponsored during the 105th Congress that makes the Healthy Start Initiative, which began in 1991 as a demonstration program, a permanent one.

I believe that as lawmakers, we have a duty to our nation's mothers and their unborn to: encourage women to make healthy choices during pregnancy by seeking prenatal care; reduce infant deaths and promote the birth of healthy babies; and provide healthy environments in which these future generations can flourish.

Healthy Start has been a successful component to accomplishing these goals and should be a permanent instrument in our efforts to cultivate healthy children.

Let's make a permanent difference in the lives of our nation's children. We owe every baby a healthy entrance into this world and each deserves a healthy start!

I urge support of my Healthy Start legislation.

IN RECOGNITION OF LIEUTENANT DOUG VERISSIMO

HON. JAMES P. McGOVERN

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, after World War II, in order to continue public interest in naval aviation, Admiral Chester Nimitz formed the Blue Angels. In June 1946, this elite group performed its first demonstration. The Blue Angels have performed for over 322 million people in the fifty-three years since that first public flight. Their aerobatics, skill and precision have amazed and entertained people of all ages. However, these pilots do much more than just fly these supersonic planes. They represent the Navy, the United States Armed Forces and the entire nation at public functions. They are role models to children and adults, demonstrating the values of successful people—teamwork, education, preparation and respect.

I would especially like to commend Lieutenant Doug Verissimo, a native of Massachusetts. Currently the #5 Lead Solo Pilot in the Blue Angels, Lt. Verissimo earned his commission and wings of gold in July 1989. He joined the Blue Angels in October 1996. Two constituents of mine—Mr. and Mrs. Carney Clary of Holden, Massachusetts—met Lt. Verissimo in 1997. Since that time, the Clarys have followed Lt. Verissimo's career. They relayed to me not only his eagerness to speak to children and adults and his commitment to his unit, but also his talent in talking to young people about the benefits of a good education and striving toward a dream. At this point, I would like to enter into the RECORD the letter from the Clarys documenting the extraordinary actions of Lt. Verissimo.

On August 21 and 22, Massachusetts will once again welcome the Blue Angels as performers. Lt. Verissimo will perform his naval duties and will demonstrate the kind of role model he is as he meets and greets the adoring fans of the Blue Angels. I welcome the Blue Angels to the Commonwealth, and I commend Lt. Verissimo for his hard work and dedication to the Blue Angels, the Navy and to America.

HOLDEN, MA,
January 24, 1999.

Congressman JAMES McGOVERN,
House Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN McGOVERN: Congratulations on your re-election. I am writing you this letter per your request after speaking with you at the Worcester Airport on August 27, 1998.

My name is Carney Clary. I reside in Holden having been born and raised in the Grafton Hill section of Worcester. I am married to the former Sheila Haran (a relative of Dan Foley) and are the parents of three children and grandparents to four. I am a three year veteran of the United States Army serving in Korea from 1955–1958. For the past 35 years I have been employed as a Police Officer in the City of Worcester. I am an avid aviation fan and attend all air shows by our own and foreign military services. I am considered the guru of aircraft and their performances by my colleagues and friends.

I spoke to you about a young Naval Aviator from Falmouth, MA who currently flies with the United States Naval Flight Demonstration Team "Blue Angels", 1st Lt. Douglas Verissimo, who last year was the navigator and this year is flying the #6 opposing solo slot. Please bear with me while I attempt to explain to you why I feel this young aviator deserves the Navy Commendation Ribbon and Medal as well as nomination to the next highest rank.

A Naval Reservist Chief Petty Officer, a friend of the family, who was on active duty serving at the Plantation St. Naval facility in Worcester made arrangements for my wife and I to partake in a social brunch with the Blue Angels Pilots in the Officer's Club on Friday, June 7, 1996. Shortly before this planned event the Commanding Officer grounded the Blue Angels in what was billed as a "Final Farewell to Boston or the S. Weymouth Naval Air Show."

The time is now June 28 and 29th 1997. My family attended the Airshow at Quonset State Airport in N. Kingston, R.I. where after the performance of the Blue Angels, the pilots come to the spectator line and sign autographs. On both these days I spoke with Lt. Verissimo finding him most professional and friendly.

In July, 1997, we vacationed in Brunswick, Me, at the Parkwood Inn. The Blue Angels also were staying in this Inn. My wife and I were sitting in the coffee lounge when Lt. Verissimo entered with his colleagues. Space being at a minimum the Lt. asked if he could sit with us. I told him how we had seen him and spoken to him in R.I. and how he signed an autograph for my grandson. I went on to tell him how disappointed I was about the failure of the Blue Angels to perform in S. Weymouth and with the commander grounding the unit and I thought this was a setback for Naval Aviation.

It was at this point that all the people present got to know Lt. Verissimo. He didn't stutter or stammer but went forward stating how the New Commanding Officer George Dom and the rest of the demo team went forward to bring the public the best ever display of aviation skills as expected by the taxpayer for the expenditure of the tax dollars. The remainder of the weekend we had breakfast in the same place and Lt. Verissimo introduced all of the people present and their assignments with the Blue Angels. Never once did he say I, but we, as a team. Lt. Verissimo told us how his mother was originally from Worcester and the main topic of his conversation was education and the importance of it. The Blue Angels left Brunswick and flew over the USS Constitution in Boston Harbor. Two weeks later Lt. Verissimo sent a beautiful picture of a flight display signed by all the members of the Blue Angels personalized to Mr. and Mrs. Clary with an enclosed note from himself.

On the 1st and 2nd of August, 1998, The Blue Angels were at Hanscom Air Base. When their demonstration was complete Lt. Verissimo again approached the sidelines for the signing of autographs. He did not see us immediately, and let me tell you, we saw a True American Professional in action. He spoke to all, the very young children, kneeling down to be at their level, the teenagers and adults, expressing the importance to the teenagers of continuing education, "what is your best subject? History, now work on making math your next best subject." "Make sure you make education number one." Education and team work. This was his focus. Lt. Verissimo exhibited his skills as a fine Military Aviator whom the United States and the State of Massachusetts should be extremely proud to call one of their own.

If ever there was an individual most deserving of the Navy Commendation Ribbon & Medal and the nomination to the next highest rank for his performance as a professional Naval Aviator, dedication to his country & service and education it is Lt. Douglas Verissimo.

Sincerely yours,

CARNEY T. CLARY.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, April 12, 1999.

Admiral NORB RYAN,
Department of the Navy, Office of Legislative Affairs (RM 5C760), Washington, DC.

DEAR ADMIRAL RYAN, I am writing to you on behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Carney Clary, who contacted me regarding Lieutenant Doug Verissimo.

Mr. and Mrs. Clary praised Lt. Verissimo for his teamwork as well as his pride in the Navy and Blue Angels. I am proud and impressed by their account of Lt. Verissimo. His actions, reflecting the values and training of the Navy and Blue Angels, should be commended.

A copy of the letter from Mr. and Mrs. Clary is included. Please pass my respect, praise and admiration to Lt. Verissimo, as well as to his Commanding Officer. Do not hesitate to contact me if I can do anything else on behalf of the Clary's or on behalf of Lt. Verissimo.

Sincerely,

JAMES P. MCGOVERN,
Member of Congress.

CERTIFIED NURSE MIDWIFERY SERVICES ACT OF 1999

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with my colleague, Mr. UPTON of Michigan, to reintroduce the Certified Nurse Midwifery Services Act.

There are approximately two million disabled women in Medicare who are of child bearing years that are not receiving "well women" services, due to the fact that Medicare is a poor payer for these covered services. Last year, the Agency for Health Policy and Research (AHPR) released a study stating that disabled women were not receiving their primary care services. A disproportionate number of disabled women who are covered by Medicare are currently being seen by Certified Nurse-Midwives (CNMs), who are duly equipped to handle the underserved population through the unique personal training of CNMs. Although, CNMs are sought to deliver these services Medicare currently reimburses a CNM in rural areas $14 for a typical well-women visit, which could include: a pap smear, mammogram, and other pre-cancer screenings. The typical well-woman visit in fee for services cost on average $50 per visit. CNMs administer the same tests and incur the same associated costs but receive only 65 percent of the physician fee schedule for these services. At this incredibly low rate of reimbursement, a CNM simply cannot survive.

Our legislation, which has over 30 bipartisan co-sponsors, increases the level of reimbursement to 95 percent of the physician fee schedule, which is the economic reality in the marketplace. Moreover, CNMs serve as faculty members of medical schools. For over 20 years, they have supervised and trained interns and residents. The bill guarantees payment for graduate medical education and includes technical corrections that will clarify the reassignment of billing rights for CNMs who are employed by others. Additionally, the bill ensures facility fee payments for freestanding birth centers where a woman can receive the full range of care from her preferred CNM.

This bill will enhance access to "well woman" care for thousands of women in underserved communities. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation as we move forward with initiatives to address shortfalls in the Medicare system.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

FOREIGN OPERATIONS, EXPORT FINANCING, AND RELATED PROGRAMS APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2000

SPEECH OF

HON. SHEILA JACKSON-LEE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1999

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2606) making appropriations for foreign operations, export financing, and related programs for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, and for other purposes:

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment offered by Representative BURTON. This amendment terminates United States bilateral aid to India for human rights reasons.

The Burton amendment is wrong on several fronts. In the wake of the recent Pakistani incursion across the line of control, the U.S. and India have a new opportunity to build a broad-based relationship. Instead of applauding India for the admirable restraint shown in the recent Kashmir crisis, this amendment would punish India by cutting humanitarian assistance.

India has been working to address its human rights record. As evidenced by the most recent State Department Country Reports on Human Rights, India has received high marks for its significant improvement. The report praised India for its substantial progress and for its Independent National Human Rights Commission. Despite the continued dispute over the future of Kashmir, India continues to allow the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit prisons in Kashmir.

India the world's largest democracy has a strong and vibrant democracy. Despite the relative youth of this democracy it features an independent judiciary, free press and political parties. The Indian press has been at the forefront in investigating human rights violations.

In a few short months, most Indians will exercise one of the greatest hallmarks of democracy, the right to vote. In the world's largest exercise of democracy, more than 250 million people will vote and more than 100 national regional parties will participate in this national election for India.

The best way we can influence our democratic allies is to continue our nation to nation dialogue. Punitive damages will only serve to hinder the progress that has been made in the relations between the United States and India. During the last year this relationship has resulted in an increased dialogue on nuclear nonproliferation, a firmer understanding of Southeast Asia security concerns, and an increase in constructive trade between our two nations. And we must encourage India and Pakistan to seek peace not war.

A "yes" vote on the Burton amendment would send the wrong message at the wrong time. We do not want to be responsible for undercutting peace and stability in the region. I respectfully ask my colleagues to vote "no" on the Burton amendment and let us continue the dialogue with India.

AMERICAN INVENTORS PROTECTION ACT OF 1999

SPEECH OF

HON. HOWARD COBLE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 3, 1999

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, in light of eleventh-hour negotiations on a final suspension version of H.R. 1907, which the House of Representatives passed on August 4, 1999, changes have been made to the bill which are not reflected in the committee report that was filed. I therefore intend that this document supplement the report for purposes of detailing a more accurate legislative history of H.R. 1907. It should be noted that the later-adopted changes to the suspension version primarily concern title II, title V, and title VI, to which these supplementary comments will be confined. Changes to other sections of the bill are technical.

Title II—First Inventor Defense

Generally. Title II strikes an equitable balance between the interests of U.S. inventors who have invented and commercialized business methods and processes, many of which until recently were thought not to be patentable, and U.S. or foreign inventors who later patent the methods and processes. The title creates a defense for inventors who have reduced an invention to practice in the U.S. at least one year before the patent filing date of another, typically later, inventor and commercially used the invention in the U.S. before the filing date. A party entitled to the defense must not have derived the invention from the patent owner. The bill protects the patent owner by providing that the establishment of the defense by such an inventor or entrepreneur does not invalidate the patent.

The title clarifies the interface between two key branches of intellectual property law—patents and trade secrets. Patent law serves the public interest by encouraging innovation and investment in new technology, and may be thought of as providing a right to exclude other parties from an invention in return for the inventor making a public disclosure of the invention. Trade secret law, however, also serves the public interest by protecting investments in new technology. Trade secrets have taken on a new importance with an increase in the ability to patent all business methods and processes. It would be administratively and economically impossible to expect any inventor to apply for a patent on all methods and processes now deemed patentable. In order to protect inventors and to encourage proper disclosure, this title focuses on methods for doing and conducting business, including methods used in connection with internal commercial operations as well as those used in connection with the sale or transfer of useful end results—whether in the form of physical products, or in the form of services, or in the form of some other useful results; for example, results produced through the manipulation of data or other inputs to produce a useful result.

The earlier-inventor defense is important to many small and large businesses, including financial services, software companies, and manufacturing firms—any business that relies on innovative business processes and methods. The 1998 opinion by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit in State Street Bank and Trust Co. v. Signature Financial Group,[1] which held that methods of doing business are patentable, has added to the urgency of the issue. As the Court noted, the reference to the business method exception had been improperly applied to a wide variety of processes, blurring the essential question of whether the invention produced a "useful, concrete, and tangible result." in the wake of State Street, thousands of methods and processes used internally are now being patented. In the past, many businesses that developed and used such methods and processes thought secrecy was the only protection available. Under established law, any of these inventions which have been in commercial use—public or secret—for more than one year cannot now be the subject of a valid U.S. patent.

Sec. 201. Short title. Title II may be cited as the "First to Invent Act."

Sec. 202. Defense to patent infringement based on earlier inventor. In establishing the defense, subsection (a) of §202 creates a new §273 of the Patent Act, which in subsection (a) sets forth the following definitions:

(5) commercially used and commercial use mean use of any method in the United States so long as the use is in connection with an internal commercial use or an actual sale or transfer of a useful end result;

(2) commercial use as applied to a nonprofit research laboratory and nonprofit entities such as a university, research center, or hospital intended to benefit the public means that such entities may assert the defense only based on continued use by and in the entities themselves, but that the defense is inapplicable to subsequent commercialization or use outside the entities;

(3) method means any method for doing or conducting an entity's business; and

(4) effective filing date means the earlier of the actual filing date of the application for the patent or the filing date of any earlier U.S., foreign, or international application to which the subject matter at issue is entitled under the Patent Act.

To be "commercially used" or in "commercial use" for purposes of subsection (a), the use must be in connection with either an internal commercial use or an actual arm's-length sale or other arm's-length commercial transfer of a useful end result. The method that is the subject matter of the defense may be an internal method for doing business, such as an internal human resources management process, or a method for conducting business such as a preliminary or intermediate manufacturing procedure, which contributes to the effectiveness of the business by producing a useful end result for the internal operation of the business or for external sale. Commercial use does not require the subject matter at issue to be accessible to or otherwise known to the public.

Subject matter that must undergo a premarketing regulatory review period during which safety or efficacy is established before commercial marketing or use is considered to be commercially used and in commercial use during the regulatory review period.

The issue of whether an invention is a method is to be determined based on its underlying nature and not on the technicality of the form of the claims in the patent. For example, a method for doing or conducting business that has been claimed in a patent as a programmed machine, as in the State Street case, is a method for purposes of §273 if the invention could have as easily been claimed as a method. Form should not rule substance.

Subsection (b)(1) of proposed §273 establishes a general defense against infringement under §271 of the Patent Act. Specifically, a person will not be held liable with respect to any subject matter that would otherwise infringe one or more claims to a method in another party's patent if the person:

(1) acting in good faith, actually reduced the subject matter to practice at least one year before the effective filing date of the patent; and

(2) commercially used the subject matter before the effective filing date of the patent.

The first inventor defense is not limited to methods in any particular industry such as the financial services industry, but applies to any industry which relies on trade secrecy for protecting methods for doing or conducting the operations of their business.

Subsection (b)(2) states that the sale or other lawful disposition of a useful end result produced by a patented method, by a person entitled to assert a §273 defense, exhausts the patent owner's rights with respect to that end result to the same extent such rights would have been exhausted had the sale or other disposition been made by the patent owner. For example, if a purchaser would have had the right to resell a product or other end result if bought from the patent owner, the purchaser will have the same right if the product is purchased from a person entitled to a §273 defense.

Subsection (b)(3) creates limitations and qualifications on the use of the defense. First, a person may not assert the defense unless the invention for which the defense is asserted is for a commercial use of a method as defined in §273(a) (1) and (3). Second, a person may not assert the defense if the subject matter was derived from the patent owner or persons in privity with the patent owner. Third, subsection (b)(3) makes clear that the application of the defense does not create a general license under all claims of the patent in question—it extends only to the specific subject matter claimed in the patent with respect to which the person can assert the defense. At the same time, however, the defense does extend to variations in the quantity or volume of use of the claimed subject matter, and to improvements that do not infringe additional, specifically-claimed subject matter.

Subsection (b)(4) requires that the person asserting the defense has the burden of proof in establishing it by clear and convincing evidence. Subsection (b)(5) establishes that the person who abandons the commercial use of subject matter may not rely on activities performed before the date of such abandonment in establishing the defense with respect to actions taken after the date of abandonment. Such a person can rely only on the date when commercial use of the subject matter was resumed.

Subsection (b)(6) notes that the defense may only be asserted by the person who performed the acts necessary to establish the defense, and, except for transfer to the patent owner, the right to assert the defense cannot be licensed, assigned, or transferred to a third party except as an ancillary and subordinate part of a good-faith assignment or transfer for other reasons of the entire enterprise or line of business to which the defense relates.

When the defense has been transferred along with the enterprise or line of business to which it relates as permitted by subsection (b)(6), subsection (b)(7) limits the sites for which the defense may be asserted. Specifically, when the enterprise or line of business to which the defense relates has been transferred, the defense may be asserted only for uses at those sites where the subject matter was used before the later of the patent filing date or the date of transfer of the enterprise or line of business.

Subsection (b)(8) states that a person who fails to demonstrate a reasonable basis for asserting the defense may be held liable for attorneys' fees under §285 of the Patent Act.

Subsection (b)(9) specifies that the successful assertion of the defense does not mean that the affected patent is invalid. Paragraph (9) eliminates a point of uncertainty under current law, and strikes a balance between the rights of an inventor who obtains a patent after another inventor has taken the steps to qualify for a prior use defense. The bill provides that the commercial use of a method in operating a business before the patentee's filing date, by an individual or entity that can establish a §273 defense, does not invalidate the patent. For example, under current law, although the matter has seldom been litigated, a party who commercially used an invention in secrecy before the patent filing date and who also invented the subject matter before the patent owner's invention may argue that the patent is invalid under §102(g) of the Patent Act. Arguably, commercial use of an invention in secrecy is not suppression or concealment of the invention within the meaning of §102(g), and therefore the party's earlier invention could invalidate the patent.[2]

Sec. 203. Effective date and applicability. The effective date for Title II is the date of enactment, except that the title does not apply to any infringement action pending on the date of enactment or to any subject matter for which an adjudication of infringement, including a consent judgment, has been made before the date of enactment.

TITLE V—PATENT LITIGATION REDUCTION ACT

Generally. Title V is intended to reduce expensive patent litigation in U.S. district courts by giving third-party requesters, in addition to the existing ex parte reexamination in Chapter 30 of title 35, the option of inter partes reexamination proceedings in the PTO. Congress enacted legislation to authorize ex parte reexamination of patents in the PTO in 1980, but such reexamination has been used infrequently since a third party who requests reexamination cannot participate at all after initiating the proceedings. Numerous witnesses have suggested that the volume of lawsuits in district courts will be reduced if third parties can be encouraged to use reexamination by giving them an opportunity to argue their case for patent invalidity in the PTO. Title V provides that opportunity as an option to the existing parte reexamination procedures.

Title V leaves existing ex parte reexamination procedures in Chapter 30 of title 35 intact, but establishes an inter partes reexamination procedure which third-party requesters can use at their option. Title V allows third parties who request inter partes reexamination to submit one written comment each time the patent owner files a response to the PTO. In addition, such third-party requesters can appeal to the PTO Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences from an examiner's determination that the reexamined patent is valid, but may not appeal to the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. To prevent harassment, anyone who requests inter partes reexamination must identify the real party in interest and third-party requesters who participate in an inter partes reexamination proceeding are estopped from raising in a subsequent court action or inter partes reexamination any issue of patent validity that they raised or could have raised during such inter partes reexamination.

Title V contains the important threshold safeguard (also applied in ex parte reexamination) that an inter partes reexamination cannot be commenced unless the PTO makes a determination that a "substantial new question" of patentability is raised. Also, as under Chapter 30, this determination cannot be appealed, and grounds for inter partes reexamination are limited to earlier patents and printed publications—grounds that PTO examiners are well-suited to consider.

Sec. 501. Short title. Title V may be cited as the "Optional Inter Partes Reexamination Procedure Act."

Sec. 502. Clarification of Chapter 30. Section 502 distinguishes Chapter 31 from existing Chapter 30 by changing the title of Chapter 30 to "Ex Parte Reexamination of Patents."

Sec. 503. Definitions. Section 503 amends §100 of the Patent Act by defining "third-party requester" as a person who is not a patent owner requesting ex parte reexamination under §302 or inter partes reexamination under §311.

Sec. 504. Optional Inter Partes Reexamination Procedure. Section 504 amends Part 3 of title 35 by inserting a new Chapter 31 setting forth optional inter partes reexamination procedures.

New §311 of §504 differs from §302 of existing law in Chapter 30 of the Patent Act by requiring any person filing a written request for inter partes reexamination

Similar to §303 of existing law, new §312 of the Patent Act confers upon the Director the authority and responsibility to determine, within three months after the filing of a request for inter partes reexamination, whether a substantial new question affecting patentability of any claim of the patent is raised by the request. Also, the decision in this regard is final and not subject to judicial review.

Proposed §§313–14 of §504 are similarly modeled after §§304–305 of Chapter 30. Under proposed §313, if the Director determines that a substantial new question of patentability affecting a claim is raised, the determination shall include an order for inter partes reexamination for resolution of the question. The order may be accompanied by the initial PTO action on the merits of the inter partes reexamination conducted in accordance with §314. Generally, under proposed §314, inter partes reexamination shall be conducted according to the procedures set forth in §§132–133 of the Patent Act. The patent owner will be permitted to propose any amendment to the patent and a new claim or claims, with the same exception contained in §305: No proposed amended or new claim enlarging the scope of the claims will be allowed.

Proposed §314 elaborates on procedure with regard to third-party requesters who, for the first time, are given the option to participate in inter partes reexamination proceedings. With the exception of the inter partes reexamination request, any document filed by either the patent owner or the third-party requester shall be served on the other party. In addition, the third party-requester in an inter partes reexamination shall receive a copy of any communication sent by the PTO to the patent owner. After each response by the patent owner to an action on the merits by the PTO, the third-party requester shall have one opportunity to file written comments addressing issues raised by the PTO or raised in the patent owner's response. Unless ordered by the Director for good cause, the agency must act in an inter partes reexamination matter with special dispatch.

Proposed §315 prescribes the procedures for appeal of an adverse PTO decision by the patent owner and the third-party requester in an inter partes reexamination. Both the patent owner and the third-party requester are entitled to appeal to the Patent Board of Appeals and Interferences (§134 of the Patent Act), but only the patentee can appeal to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit (§§141–144); either may also be a party to any appeal by the other to the Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences. The patentee is not entitled to the alternative of an appeal of an inter partes reexamination to the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. Such appeals are rarely taken from inter partes reexamination proceedings under existing law and its removal should speed up the process.

To deter unnecessary litigation, proposed §315 imposes constraints on the third-party requester. In general, a third-party requester who is granted an inter partes reexamination by the PTO may not assert at a later time in any civil action in U.S. district court[3] the invalidity of any claim finally determined to be patentable on any ground that the third-party requester raised or could have raised during the inter partes reexamination. However, the third-party requester may assert invalidity based on newly discovered prior art unavailable at the time of the reexamination. Prior art was unavailable at the time of the inter partes reexamination if it was not known to the individuals who were involved in the reexamination proceeding on behalf of the third-party requester and the PTO.

Section 316 provides for the Director to issue and publish certificates canceling unpatentable claims, confirming patentable claims, and incorporating any amended or new claim determined to be patentable in an inter partes procedure.

Title V creates a new §317 which sets forth certain conditions by which inter partes reexamination is prohibited to guard against harassment of a patent holder. In general, once an order for inter partes reexamination has been issued, neither a third-party requester nor the patent owner may file a subsequent request for inter partes reexamination until an inter partes reexamination certificate is issued and published, unless authorized by the Director. Further, if a third-party requester asserts patent invalidity in a civil action and a final decision is entered that the party failed to provide the assertion of invalidity, or if a final decision in an inter partes reexamination instituted by the requester is favorable to patentability, after any appeals, that third-party requester cannot thereafter request inter partes reexamination on the basis of issues which were or which could have been raised. However, the third-party requester may assert invalidity based on newly discovered prior art unavailable at the time of the civil action or inter parties reexamination. Prior art was unavailable at the time if it was not known to the individuals who were involved in the civil action or inter parties reexamination proceeding on behalf of the third-party requester and the PTO.

Proposed §318 gives a patent owner the right, once an inter partes reexamination has been ordered, to obtain a stay of any pending litigation involving an issue of patentability of any claims of the patent that are the subject of the inter partes reexamination, unless the court determines that the stay would not serve the interests of justice.

Section 505. Conforming amendments. Section 505 makes the following conforming amendments to the Patent Act:

A patent owner must pay a fee of $1,210 for each petition in connection with an unintentionally abandoned application, delayed payment, or delayed response by the patent owner during any reexamination.

A patent applicant, any of whose claims have been twice rejected; a patent owner in an reexamination proceeding; and a third-party requester in an inter partes reexamination proceeding may all appeal final adverse decisions from a primary examiner to the Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences.

Proposed §141 states that a patent owner in a reexamination proceeding may appeal an adverse decision by the Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences only to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit as earlier noted. A third-party requester in an inter partes reexamination proceeding may not appeal beyond the Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences.

The Director is required pursuant to §143 (proceedings on appeal to the Federal Circuit) to submit to the court the grounds for the PTO decision in any reexamination addressing all the issues involved in the appeal.

Sec. 506. Report to Congress. Five years after the effective date of title V, the Director must submit to Congress a report evaluating whether the inter partes reexamination proceedings set forth in the title are inequitable to any of the parties in interest and, if so, the report shall contain recommendations for change to eliminate the inequity.

Sec. 507. Estoppel Effect of Reexamination. Section 507 estops any party who requests inter partes reexamination from challenging at a later time, in any civil action, any fact determined during the process of the inter partes reexamination, except with respect to a fact determination later proved to be erroneous based on information unavailable at the time of the inter partes reexamination. The estoppel arises after a final decision in the inter partes reexamination or a final decision in any appeal of such reexamination. If §507 is held to be unenforcable, the enforceability of the rest of title V or the Act is not affected.

Sec. 508. Effective date. Title V shall take effect on the date that is one year after the date of enactment and shall apply to all inter partes reexamination requests filed on or after such date.

Title VI—Patent and Trademark Office

Generally. Title VI establishes the PTO as an agency of the United States within the Department of Commerce. The Secretary of Commerce gives policy direction to the agency, but the agency itself is responsible for the management and administration of operations and has independent control of budget allocations and expenditures, personnel decisions and processes, and procurement. The Committee intends that the office will conduct its patent and trademark operations without micromanagement by Department of Commerce officials, with the exception of policy guidance of the Secretary. The agency is headed by an Under Secretary of Commerce for Intellectual Property and Director of the United States Patent and Trademark Office, a Deputy, and a Commissioner of Patents and a Commissioner of Trademarks. The agency is exempt from government-wide personnel ceilings. A patent public advisory committee and a trademark public advisory committee are established to advise the Director on agency policies, goals, performance, budget and user fees.

Sec. 601. Short title. Title VI may be cited as the "Patent and Trademark Office Efficiency Act."

SUBTITLE A—UNITED STATES PATENT AND TRADEMARK OFFICE

Sec. 611. Establishment of Patent and Trademark Office. Section 611 establishes the PTO as an agency of the United States within the Department of Commerce and under the policy direction of the Secretary of Commerce. The PTO is explicitly responsible for decisions regarding the management and administration of its operations and has independent control of budget allocations and expenditures, personnel decisions and processes, procurements, and other administrative and management functions. Patent operations and trademark operations are to be treated as separate operating units within the Office.

The PTO shall maintain its principal office in the metropolitan Washington, D.C., area, for the service of process and papers and for the purpose of discharging its functions. For purposes of venue in civil actions, the agency is deemed to be a resident of the district in which its principal office if located, except where otherwise provided by law. The PTO is also permitted to establish satellite offices in such other places in the United States as it considers necessary and appropriate to conduct business.

Sec. 612. Powers and duties. Subject to the policy direction of the Secretary of Commerce, in general the PTO will be responsible for granting and issuing patents, the registration of trademarks, and the dissemination of patent and trademark information to the public.

The PTO will also possess specific powers, which include:

(1) a requirement to adopt and use an Office seal for judicial notice purposes and for authenticating patents, trademark certificates and papers issued by the Office;

(2) the authority to establish regulations, not inconsistent with law, that

(A) govern the conduct of PTO proceedings within the Office,

(B) are in accordance with §553 of title 5,

(C) facilitate and expedite the processing of patent applications, particularly those which can be processed electronically,

(D) govern the recognition, conduct, and qualifications of agents, attorneys, or other persons representing applicants or others before the PTO,

(E) recognize the public interest in ensuring that the patent system retain a reduced fee structure for small entities, and

(F) provide for the development of a performance-based process for managing that includes quantitative and qualitative measures, standards for evaluating cost-effectiveness, and consistency with principles of impartiality and competitiveness;

(3) the authority to acquire, construct, purchase, lease, hold, manage, operate, improve, alter and renovate any real, personal, or mixed property as it considers necessary to discharge its functions;

(4) the authority to make purchases of property, contracts for construction, maintenance, or management and operation of facilities, as well as to contract for and purchase printing services without regard to those federal laws which govern such proceedings;

(5) the authority to use services, equipment, personnel, facilities and equipment of other federal entities, with their consent and on a reimbursable basis;

(6) the authority to use, with the consent of the United States and the agency, government, or international organization concerned, the services, records, facilities or personnel of any State or local government agency or foreign patent or trademark office or international organization to perform functions on its behalf;

(7) the authority to retain and use all of its revenues and receipts;

(8) a requirement to advise the President, through the Secretary of Commerce, on national and certain international intellectual property policy issues;

(9) a requirement to advise Federal departments and agencies of intellectual property policy in the United States and intellectual property protection abroad;

(10) a requirement to provide guidance regarding proposals offered by agencies to assist foreign governments and international intergovernmental organizations on matters of intellectual property protection;

(11) the authority to conduct programs, studies of exchanges regarding domestic or international intellectual property law and the effectiveness of intellectual property protection domestically and abroad;

(12) a requirement to advise the Secretary of Commerce on any programs and studies relating to intellectual property policy that the PTO may conduct or is authorized to conduct, cooperatively with foreign intellectual property offices and international intergovernmental organizations; and

(13) the authority to (A) coordinate with the Department of State in conducting programs and studies cooperatively with foreign intellectual property offices and international intergovernmental organizations, and (B) transfer, with the concurrence of the Secretary of State, up to $100,000 in any year to the Department of State to pay an international intergovernmental organization for studies and programs advancing international cooperation concerning patents, trademarks, and other matters.

The specific powers set forth in new subsection (b) are clarified in new subsection (c). The special payments of paragraph (14)(B) are additional to other payments or contributions and are not subject to any limitation imposed by law. Nothing in subsection (b) derogates from the duties of the Secretary of State or the United States Trade Representative as set forth in §141 of the Trade Act of 1974,[4] nor derogates from the duties and functions of the Register of Copyrights. The Director is required to consult with the Administrator of General Services when exercising authority under paragraphs (3) and (4)(A). Finally, nothing in §612 may be construed to nullify, void, cancel, or interrupt any pending request-for-proposal let or contract issued by the General Services Administration for the specific purpose of relocating or leasing space to the PTO.

Sec. 613. Organization and management. Section 613 details the organization and management of the agency. The powers and duties of the PTO shall be vested in the Director, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate. The Director performs two main functions. As Under Secretary of Commerce for Intellectual Property, she serves as the policy advisor to the Secretary of Commerce on intellectual property issues. As Director, she is responsible for the management and direction of the PTO. She shall consult with the Public Advisory Committees, infra, on a regular basis regarding operations of the agency and before submitting budgetary proposals and fee or regulation changes. the Director shall take an oath of office. The President may remove the Director from office, but must provide notification to both houses of Congress.

The Secretary of Commerce, upon nomination of the director, shall appoint a Deputy Director to act in the capacity of the Director if the Director is absent or incapacitated. The Secretary of Commerce shall also appoint two Commissioners, one for Patents, the other for Trademarks, without regard to chapters 31, 51, or 53 of the U.S. Code. The Commissioners will have five-year terms and may be reappointed to new terms by the Secretary. Each Commissioner shall possess a demonstrated experience in patent and trademark law, respectively; and they shall be responsible for the management and direction of the patent and trademark operations, respectively. In addition to receiving a basic rate of compensation under the Senior Executive Service[5] and a locality payment,[6] the Commissioners may receive bonuses of up to 50 percent of their annual basic rate of compensation, not to exceed the salary of the Vice President, based on a performance evaluation by the Secretary, acting through the Director. The Secretary may remove Commissioners for misconduct or unsatisfactory performance.

[4] 19 U.S.C. §2171.

The Director may also appoint other officers, agents, and employees as she sees fit, and define their responsibilities with equal discretion. The PTO is specifically not subject to any administratively or statutorily imposed limits (full-time equivalents, or "FTEs") on positions or personnel.

The PTO is charged with developing and submitting to Congress a proposal for an incentive program to retain senior (of the primary examiner grade or higher) patent and trademark examiners eligible for retirement for the sole purpose of training patent and trademark examiners.

The PTO will be subject to all provisions of title 5 of the U.S. Code governing federal employees. All relevant labor agreements which are in effect the day before enactment of title VI shall be adopted by the agency. All PTO employees as of the day before the effective date of Title VI shall remain officers and employees of the agency without a break in service. Other personnel of the Department of Commerce shall be transferred to the PTO only if necessary to carry out purposes of title VI of the bill and if a major function of their work is reimbursed by the PTO they spend at least half of their work time in support of the PTO, or a transfer to the PTO would be in the interest of the agency, as determined by the Secretary of Commerce in consultation with the Director.

On or after the effective date of the Act, the President shall appoint an individual to serve as Director until a Director qualifies under subsection (a). The persons serving as the Assistant Commissioner for Patents and the Assistant Commissioner for Trademarks on the day before the effective date of the Act may serve as the Commissioner for Patents and the Commissioner for Trademarks, respectively, until a respective Commissioner is appointed under subsection (b)(2).

Sec. 614. Public Advisory Committees. Section 613 provides a new section 5 of the Patent Act which establishes a Patent Public Advisory Committee and a Trademark Public Advisory Committee. Each Committee has nine voting members with three-year terms appointed by and serving at the pleasure of the Secretary of Commerce. Initial appointments will be made within three months of the effective date of the Act; and three of the initial appointees will receive one-year terms, three will receive two-year terms, and three will receive full terms. Vacancies will be filled within three months. The Secretary will also designate chairpersons for three-year terms.

The members of the Committees will be U.S. citizens and will be chosen to represent the interests of users. The Patent Public Advisory Committee shall have members who represent small and large entity applicants in the United States in proportion to the number of applications filed by the small and large entity applicants. In no case shall the small entity applicants be represented by less than 25 percent of the members of the Patent Public Advisory Committee, at least one of whom shall be an independent inventor. The members of both Committees shall include individuals with substantial background and achievement in finance, management, labor relations, science, technology, and office automation. The patent and trademark examiners' unions are entitled to have one representative on their respective Advisory Committee in a non-voting capacity.

The Committees meet at the call of the chair to consider an agenda established by the chair. Each Committee reviews the policies, goals, performance, budget, and user fees that bear on its area of concern and advises the Director on these matters. Within 60 days of the end of a fiscal year, the Committees prepare annual reports, transmit the reports to the Secretary of Commerce, the President, and the Committees on the Judiciary of the Congress, and publish the reports in the Official Gazette of the PTO.

Members of the Committees are compensated at a defined daily rate for meeting and travel days. Members are provided access to PTO records and information other than personnel or other privileged information including that concerning patent applications. Members are special Government employees within the meaning of §202 of title 18. The Federal Advisory Committee Act shall not apply to the Committees. Finally, §614 provides that Committee meetings shall be open to the public unless by a majority vote the Committee meets in executive session to consider personnel or other confidential information.

Sec. 615. Patent and Trademark Office funding. Pursuant to §42(c) of the Patent Act, fee available to the Commissioner under §31 of the Trademark Act of 1946[7] may be used only for the processing of trademark registrations and for other trademark-related activities, and to cover a proportionate share of the administrative costs of the PTO. In an effort to more tightly "fence" trademark funds for trademark purposes, §615 amends this language such that all (trademark) fees available to the Commissioner shall be used for trademark registration and other trademark-related purposes. In other words, the Commissioner may exercise no discretion when spending funds; they must be earmarked for trademark purposes.

Sec. 616. Conforming amendments. Technical conforming amendments to the Patent Act are set forth in §616.

Sec. 617. Trademark Trial and Appeal Board. Section 617 amends §17 of the Trademark Act of 1946 by specifying that the Director shall give notice to all affected parties and shall direct a Trademark Trial and Appeal Board to determine the respective rights of those parties before it in a relevant proceeding. The section also invests the Director with the power of appointing administrative trademark judges to the Board. The Director, the Commissioner for Trademarks, the Commissioner for Patents, and the administrative trademark judges shall serve on the Board.

Sec. 618. Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences. Under existing §7 of the Patent Act, the Commissioner, Deputy Commissioner, Assistant Commissioner, and the examiners-in-chief constitute the Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences. Pursuant to §618 of Title VI, the Board is comprised of the Director, the Commissioner for Patents, the Commissioner for Trademarks, and the administrative patent judges. In addition, the existing statute allows each appellant a hearing before three members of the Board who are designated by the Commissioner. Section 618 empowers the Director with this authority.

Sec. 619. Annual report of Director. No later than 180 days after the end of each fiscal year, the Director must provide a report to Congress detailing funds received and expended by the PTO, the purposes for which the funds were spent, the quality and quantity of PTO work, the nature of training provided to examiners, the evaluations of the Commissioners by the Secretary of Commerce, the Commissioners' compensation, and other information relating to the agency.

Sec. 620. Suspension or exclusion from practice. Under existing §32 of the Patent Act, the Commissioner (the Director pursuant to §632 of this Act) has the authority, after notice and a hearing, to suspend or exclude from further practice before the PTO any person who is incompetent, disreputable, indulges in gross misconduct or fraud, or is noncompliant with PTO regulations. Section 620 permits the Director to designate an attorney who is an officer or employee of the PTO to conduct a hearing under §32.

Sec. 621. Pay of Director and Deputy Director. Section 621 replaces the Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks with the Under Secretary of Commerce for Intellectual Property and Director of the United States Patent and Trademark Office to receive pay at Level III of the Executive Schedule.[8] Section 621 also establishes the pay of the Deputy Director at Level IV of the Executive Schedule.[9]

Sec. 622. Study on fees. Section 622 call on the Under Secretary of Commerce for Intellectual Property to conduct a study of alternative fee structures to encourage maximum participation by inventors in the PTO.

SUBTITLE B—EFFECTIVE DATE; TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS

Sec. 631. Effective Date. The effective date of Title VI is four months after the date of enactment.

Section 632. Technical and conforming amendments. Section 632 sets forth numerous technical and conforming amendments related to Title VI.

SUBTITLE C—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Sec. 641. References. Section 641 clarifies that any reference to the transfer of a function from a department or office to the head of such department or office means the head of such department or office to which the function is transferred. In addition, in other federal materials to the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks refer, upon enactment, to the Director of the United States Patent and Trademark Office. Similarly, references to the Assistant Commissioner for Patents deemed to refer to the Commissioner for Patents and references to the Assistant Commissioner for Trademarks are deemed to refer to the Commissioner for Trademarks.

Sec. 642. Exercise of authorities. Under §642, except as otherwise provided by law, a federal official to whom a function is transferred pursuant to Title VI may exercise all authorities under any other provision of law that were available regarding the performance of that function to the official empowered to perform that function immediately before the date of the transfer of the function.

Sec. 643. Savings provisions. Relevant legal documents that relate to a function which is transferred by Title VI, and which are in effect on the date of such transfer, shall continue in effect according to their terms unless later modified or repealed in an appropriate manner. Applications or proceedings concerning any benefit, service, or license pending on the effective date of Title VI before an office transferred shall not be affected, and shall continue thereafter, but may later be modified or repealed in the appropriate manner.

FOOD STAMP OUTREACH AND RESEARCH FOR KIDS ACT OF 1999 (FORK) WILL KEEP CHILDREN FROM GOING HUNGRY

HON. WILLIAM J. COYNE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, today Representative SANDER LEVIN and I are introducing legislation to make sure that children in America do not go hungry. In 1998, over 14 million children lived in households that couldn't always afford to buy food. That was an increase of almost 4 million children over 1997. At the same time, the number of poor children not getting Food Stamps reached its highest level in a decade. Our bill, the Food Stamp Outreach and Research for Kids Act of 1999 (FORK), would help us give children who are currently going hungry the Food Stamps they need.

Some time ago, our local food banks started telling me that the number of people coming to them for help was increasing. They were concerned that they might run out of food if the demand kept going up. When we asked them who the new people coming to the food bank were, they said they were mostly low-income working families. When the food bank screened people using the eligibility guidelines, it looked like most of the new people who came to the Food Bank should have been receiving Food Stamps but were not.

Because of those reports and others like them, SANDER LEVIN and I asked the General Accounting Office to investigate and determine whether Food Stamp-eligible families wee losing benefits, the cause of any declines, and what impact declines were having on children.

GAO recently finished its investigation, which confirmed many of the anecdotal reports. While a number of people have left the Food Stamp program because of the improved economy, economic growth alone does not explain the drop in Food Stamp participation. GAO found that demand for emergency and supplemental food was increasing and that some state agencies were not following federal laws regarding Food Stamp benefits. Perhaps most disturbing of all, GAO found that almost half of the people who have lost Food Stamps since 1996 are children.

Our bill, the Food Stamp Outreach and Research for Kids Act of 1999 (FORK), is designed to address GAO's findings and recommendations.

FORK would provide grant funding to food banks, schools, health clinics, local governments, and other entities that interact with working families. The grants would allow those organizations to develop and expand innovative approaches to Food Stamp outreach, which would help the Food and Nutrition Service enroll many of the eligible families that currently go hungry.

FORK would also require the Food and Nutrition Service (FNS) to conduct on-site inspections of state Food Stamp programs to identify barriers to enrollment and work with states to develop corrective action plans.

FORK would authorize FNS to conduct research which will help it improve access, formulate nutrition policy, and measure program impacts and integrity.

FORK would require the Departments of Agriculture and Health and Human Services to work with state Temporary Aid to Needy Families (TANF) programs to retrain caseworkers and make sure that prospective and former TANF recipients are informed about their Food Stamp eligibility.

Finally, FORK would authorize FNS to form public-private partnerships to expand its nutrition education program.

I hope our colleagues will join us in supporting this important legislation. I do not believe that anyone in Congress ever intended for children to go hungry because their parents left welfare and went to work. Now that we know it is happening, it is our responsibility to act quickly to make the Food Stamp program work for families in need.

HONORING FORMER SECRETARY LLOYD M. BENTSEN ON THE RECEIPT OF THE PRESIDENTIAL MEDAL OF FREEDOM

HON. KEN BENTSEN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, August 11, 1999, President William Jefferson Clinton will present the Medal of Freedom to Lloyd M. Bentsen—the 69th Secretary of the Treasury, member of the Senate and House of Representatives, and candidate for Vice President of the United States.

Lloyd Bentsen was born in Mission, in Texas' Rio Grande Valley in 1921. The first of four children to Edna Ruth Colbath Bentsen and Lloyd M. Bentsen, Sr. Lloyd Bentsen grew up in the South Texas farming community, seven miles from the Mexican border. He received his B.A. and law degree from the University of Texas in 1942. With World War II underway, he enlisted in the U.S. Army Air Corps. After brief service as a private in intelligence work in Brazil, he became a pilot and in early 1944 began flying combat missions in B–24's from southern Italy with the 449th Bomb Group. At age 23 he was promoted to rank of Major and given command of a squadron of 600 men.

In 18 months of combat, Bentsen flew 35 missions against highly defended targets such as the Ploesti oil fields in Romania, which were critical to the German war machine. The 15th Air Force, to which the 449th was attached, is credited with destroying all the gasoline production within its range, or about half German's fuel on the continent. Bentsen's unit also flew against communications centers, aircraft factories, and industrial targets in Germany, Italy, Austria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria. Bentsen participated in bombing raids in support of the Anzio campaign, and flew against targets in preparation for the landing in southern France.

He was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross, one of the Army Air Corps' and now the Air Force's highest commendations for valor. He also was awarded the Air Medal with three oak leaf clusters, the medal and each subsequent cluster representing specific campaigns for which he was decorated. He was promoted to colonel in the Air Force Reserve before completing his military service.

After the war, Bentsen returned to his native Rio Grande Valley where he was elected as Hidalgo County Judge in 1946 and to the U.S. House of Representatives from the 15th Congressional District in 1948. He served three terms in the House during which he cast crucial votes against the poll tax and in support of programs for returning veterans. He declined to seek reelection in 1954 and decided to begin a career in business.

For 16 years, Bentsen was a businessman in Houston. By 1970, he had become President of Lincoln Consolidated, a financial holding institution, including insurance, banking, and real estate. In this capacity, he built the first integrated hotel in Houston.

Secretary Bentsen was elected a United States Senator from Texas in 1970 and served as Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee from 1987 through early 1993. He also served as Chairman of the Joint Committee on Taxation and the Joint Economic Committee and was a member of the Senate Armed Services, Commerce, Science and Transportation, Intelligence, and Environment and Public Works Committees. In 1988, he was the Democratic Party nominee for Vice President of the United States.

During his 23 years in the U.S. Senate, Lloyd Bentsen drafted and passed progressive and far reaching legislation. He left an indelible mark on tax, trade, health care, and transportation legislation. His greatest achievements include the passage of the landmark Employer Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), the Trade Act of 1988, Equal Opportunity Education legislation, anti-age discrimination legislation for the elderly, Medicare and Medicaid expansion—particularly benefiting indigent children. He was also a leader in establishing a more equitable funding formula for federal highways. As a result, Texas' highways are in much better shape because of his efforts.

Senator Bentsen was nominated by President Clinton to be the 69th Secretary of the Treasury. He served from January 20, 1993 until December 22, 1994.

As Secretary of the Treasury, Lloyd Bentsen was an important architect of the President's economic recovery package that has helped fuel the longest peacetime economic expansion in more than 60 years, while bringing the federal budget into balance. He also led the President's effort to pass the North American Free Trade Agreement.

On December 27, 1994 he ended his 30-plus years of public service and returned to practice law in Houston, where he now resides with his wife of 55 years, the former Beryl Ann Longino of Lufkin, Texas. While public service has been their calling, their true blessing has been their three children, Lloyd III, Lan, and Tina and their respective spouses, Gail, Adele, and Rick Smith and their seven grandchildren, Lloyd IV and Ryan Bentsen; Skyler, Kendall and Kate Bentsen; and Lori and Richard Smith.

Mr. Speaker, Lloyd Bentsen is a committed public servant with a remarkable record of achievement as Treasury Secretary, Senator, Representative, businessman and decorated was veteran. He is also a devoted husband and a caring father, grandfather, and uncle. He has dedicated his life to public service and his family. He is an example and an inspiration to Texans and Americans, of all that is good in public service. He is truly deserving of the Medal of Freedom, which is awarded by the President and recognizes individuals who have made significant meritorious contributions to the security or national interests of the United States; world peace; cultural or other significant public or private endeavors. Without doubt, Lloyd Bentsen meets this criteria and I salute him for his achievements and receipt of this award.

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE PEPSI SOUTHERN 500

HON. JOHN M. SPRATT, JR.

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, on September 5th of this year, the Darlington Raceway will celebrate the 50th Anniversary of the Southern 500 stock car race, now known as the Pepsi Southern 500.

The Darlington Raceway, I'm proud to say, is located in my district. It was built in 1949, and unlike most stock car tracks of its day, it was paved with asphalt, giving the track its name, "The Lady in Black."

Harold Brasington, a native of Darlington, attended the Indianapolis 500 in 1933, and brought home with him a dream, a vision of some day having a race track in his home town, Darlington, South Carolina. Harold Brasington's dream had to wait out the Depression and World War II, but he nurtured it and in 1949 he made it come true.

The first Southern 500 was held on September 1, 1950, and sanctioned by "Big Bill" France and NASCAR, the National Association of Stock Car Auto Racing. STROM THURMOND was the Governor of South Carolina at the time, and he and his lovely wife, Jean, cut the ribbon and christened the race the "Southern 500," to the delight of 25,000 fans, an unexpected overflow crowd.

The Southern 500 was an instant success. It soon grew into the largest sporting event in South Carolina. This Labor Day Weekend, over 100,000 people are expected for the 50th anniversary. Millions more will enjoy the race by television or radio.

The great success of the Darlington Raceway started with the vision and skills of two great entrepreneurs, Harold Brasington and "Big Bill" France, both now gone. But their leadership has been carried forward by Jim Hunter, who has made Darlington Raceway bigger and better than ever, and who has won recognition as South Carolina's "Economic Ambassador." Because of his skills as a manager and sports promoter, the Pepsi Southern 500 and the TranSouth 400 now generate over $50 million, making the Darlington Raceway a top source of tourism income for South Carolina.

Other race tracks have been built since 1949, some larger, some more glamorous than Darlington. But the Darlington Raceway remains world famous, and an attraction fans everywhere, because it remains the genuine article.

The Darlington Raceway has never forgotten its roots and the people who helped make it what it is. Every year, the Darlington Raceway makes a substantial contribution to Darlington's schools. It recognizes a Darlington County Teacher of the Year, and awards a scholarship to a Darlington County high school senior; and every year, it cosponsors a gala honoring 1500 county educators.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to represent the Darlington Raceway. As we approach the 50th Anniversary of the Southern 500, I think commendations are in order for Jim Hunter, President of the Darlington Raceway; for Bill France, Jr., CEO of International Speedway Corporation and President of NASCAR; and for everyone involved in bringing us 50 years of the finest, most exciting stock car racing in the world.

SILK ROAD STRATEGY ACT OF 1999

SPEECH OF

HON. JOSEPH R. PITTS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1999

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 1152, the Silk Road Strategy Act. I commend my colleague, Mr. BEREUTER, for championing this important legislation that will greatly benefit countries in Central Asia and the Caucasus.

The Silk Road Strategy Act is a proactive policy of engagement, which authorizes U.S. assistance to support the economic and political independence of Kazakhstan, Krygyzstan, Tajikistan, Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan, Armenia, Georgia, and Azerbaijan. Since the break-up of the Soviet Union, after decades of Communist rule, these countries have faced a tough road toward economic development and prosperity, and the cultivation of a democratic society.

With this in mind, the U.S. must actively engage this region to ensure a peaceful post-Soviet era, and to protect our national security. Since being elected to Congress in 1996, I have worked hard to build bridges between the U.S. and Central Asia and the Caucasus. Through regular meetings with Ambassadors from this region and travel to Central Asia, I am keenly aware of the necessity of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, the Great Silk Road, which in ancient times joined the East with the West, by means of trade, cultural-humanitarian, political and economic ties, has a history stretching back several thousand years. The Great Silk Road played the role of a connecting bridge between countries and civilizations. It served as a channel for trade, which became the catalyst for the development of crafts and the active exchange of philosophies and cultures. The spirit of the Great Silk Road is what this bill before us today is about—a new Silk Road—connecting Central Asia and the Caucasus with the United States, in an effort to encourage economic, cultural, and political exchange between our countries.

I am proud to be a cosponsor of this bill and look forward to continuing working with Central Asia and Caucasus states to build prosperous market-oriented economies in the former Soviet Union. Again, I thank my colleague, Mr. BEREUTER, for sponsoring this bill, and I urge my colleagues to support the Silk Road Strategy Act.

HOMES OVER TAX CUTS

HON. JANICE D. SCHAKOWSKY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Speaker, I am protesting this rule because it's the first step in ripping off the roof over people's heads.

That's what we are doing when we cut the HUD budget. Some people will argue that cutting the budget is good government. They will argue that we are reducing wasteful government spending. But this isn't just some government program. It's a roof over people's heads. When we cut this program, we are taking away some senior's rent money. We are throwing families out of their homes. We are denying people on fixed and low incomes the safety and security of an affordable home.

One of those government programs is the Section 8 program. HUD has contracted with private landlords to provide affordable apartments to people on fixed and low incomes. Over 500,000 of those apartments will come up for renewal in the next five years. If we don't renew those contracts, landlords will leave the program, raise their rents and evict hundreds of thousands of people on fixed and low incomes.

This is a terrible thing and we know it. Last March, we cut $350 million from the Section 8 program to pay for non-emergency spending in Kosovo. But both the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the Chairman of the VA–HUD Appropriations subcommittee promised to put it back if they could because they know that it is money well spent. If we have the money, we ought to use it to give people a safe home so they can go to work and their children can go to school and they all can be productive citizens.

Well, we can put the $350 million back if we don't give $800 billion to wealthy special interest in the form of an irresponsible tax cut. And we should put in an extra $1 billion that the President has requested because 500,000 households are depending on us.

This money is well spent. It's money for local governments to attract jobs. It's money for services for seniors and persons with disabilities so that they can live their lives with some comfort. It's money for secure families. People deserve this from us and we ought to give it to them. Oppose this rule, because it's the first step in ripping off the roof over people's heads.

FULLY FUND HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

NATIONAL LOW INCOME HOUSING COALITION,
Washington, DC, August 3, 1999.

Hon. JANICE SCHAKOWSKY,
House of Representatives,
Cannon Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE SCHAKOWSKY: This year marks the 50th anniversary of the Housing Act of 1949, in which Congress declared the national goal of a decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family. We believe, as do most Americans, that this nation is capable of achieving this worthy goal.

However, we have a long way to go. Even while most Americans are thriving in our remarkably healthy economy, many families still struggle with excessive housing costs and insufficient income to meet basic needs. Over 9,000,000 very low income households pay more than half of their income for housing. The 1999 report by the Joint Center for Housing Studies at Harvard, The State of the Nation's Housing, clearly documents the paradox of record accomplishments in housing production and home ownership while rents are increasing faster than wages. Nowhere in the country can a household with one full time minimum wage earner afford basic housing costs. Families who apply for housing assistance wait longer than they ever have before, and in many communities, waiting lists are closed indefinitely.

We believe that a time when we are celebrating bountiful budget surpluses is also the time to address our severe national shortage of affordable housing. This can best be done by strengthening the proven federal housing and community development programs that lift up low-income Americans. There is ample evidence that housing assistance helps low income families gain the housing stability that is necessary for family members to succeed at work and in school.

Unfortunately, the action of the House Appropriations Committee last week weakens our housing and community development programs. Rather than building on the success of our economy by extending its rewards to more and more people, the Committee moved us backwards by failing to fully fund the President's FY2000 HUD budget request. The bill cuts CDBG, HOME, HOPWA, Public Housing Operating Fund, and Homeless Assistance, among others, and does not fund a single new housing voucher.

We find it inconceivable that in this period of extraordinary economic prosperity that Congress continues to purport that we are unable to fund modest expansions of programs that improve the housing and economic opportunities of low wage earners and people on fixed incomes. The substantial tax cuts that are under consideration in the House will not improve the housing circumstances of low income people, but more housing assistance will.

We urge you to vote against the HUD–VA–IA Appropriations bill when it comes to the full House. We are capable of doing much better.

GAMBLING ATM, AND CREDIT/DEBIT CARD REFORM ACT

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing legislation to implement one of the more important recommendations of the National Gambling Impact Study Commission to help lessen the potential financial losses of compulsive gambling for individuals and families. My legislation, the "Gambling ATM and Credit/Debit Card Reform Act", amends federal law to reduce the ready availability of cash and credit for gambling by removing automated transfer machines (ATMs), credit card terminals, debit card point-of-sale machines and other electronic cash dispensing devices from the immediate area of gambling activities.

The National Gambling Impact Study Commission recently completed the nation's first comprehensive analysis of legalized gambling in more than twenty years. The Commission took on one of the most difficult and divisive issues in America today and produced an extremely thoughtful report with more than 70 recommendations for changes in gambling policy. The thoroughness of the Commission's effort, despite significant divisions and difficulties, is commendable and clearly justifies the efforts of those of us who sponsored legislation to create the Commission three years ago.

A major finding of the Commission is that America has been transformed during the past 20 years from a nation in which legalized gambling was localized and limited to one in which it is almost omnipresent and a major economic and entertainment activity. Some form of legalized gambling is now permitted in 47 states and the District of Columbia. Thirty-seven states officially sponsor gambling through state lotteries. Americans now spend an estimated $650 billion a year on legalized gambling—more than they spend on movies, records, theme parks, professional sports and all other forms of entertainment combined.

The Commission also found that while legalized gambling can produce positive economic benefits for the communities in which it is introduced, it also produces significant negative consequences for millions of individuals and families—consequences such as bankruptcy, crime, divorce, abuse and even suicide. A specific concern of the Commission has been the dramatic increase in problem and pathological gambling. Studies suggest that more than 5 million Americans are pathological or problem gamblers, and that another 15 million have been identified as "at-risk" or compulsive gamblers. Growth in problem and compulsive gambling has been particularly noticeable among women and includes growing numbers of teenagers.

The Commission identified the ready availability of cash and credit in and around gambling establishments as a major factor contributing to irresponsible gambling and to problem and pathological gambling behavior. Between forty and sixty percent of all money wagered by individuals in casinos, for example, is not physically brought onto the premises but is obtained by gamblers after their arrival. Much of this money derives from credit markers extended by casinos, but a growing portion involves cash derived from ATMs and debit cards and cash advances on credit cards.

Credit cards, debit cards and ATMs have long been used within gambling resort hotels and near other gambling facilities. But their availability and use on gambling floors for purposes of making bets or purchasing playing chips was generally prohibited. This changed in 1996 when the New Jersey Casino Control Commission approved the use of credit card point-of-sale machines at gambling tables for direct purchases of playing chips and slot tokens. The action was immediately recognized by gambling experts as one of the "most potentially dramatic changes" in gambling in decades that would result in more impulse gambling by consumers and higher revenues for casinos. Since then, ATM machines have been moved from outside casinos and other gambling establishments to locations near gambling floors and debit card machines have also been installed directly at gaming tables.

Allowing gamblers to use ATMs, credit and debit cards directly for gambling removes one of the last remaining checks on compulsive or problem gambling—the need to walk away to find more cash to gamble. This separation helps break the excitement of the moment and permits many gamblers to walk away. Providing electronic transfers of additional cash not only feeds compulsive behavior, but makes it easier for problem gamblers to bet all their available cash, draw down their bank accounts, and then tap into the available credit lines of their credit cards as well. Financial institutions become unwitting accomplices in encouraging gamblers to bet more money than they intended and more than most can afford.

My legislation addresses this problem in a number of ways. First, it amends the Truth in Lending Act (TILA) to prohibit gambling establishments from placing credit card terminals, or accepting credit cards for payment or cash advances, in the immediate area where any form of gambling is conducted. It also amends the Electronic Funds Transfer Act (EFTA) to impose a similar prohibition on the placing of any automated teller machine, point-of-sale terminal or other electronic cash dispensing device in the immediate area where gambling occurs. The bill directs the Federal Reserve Board to publish and enforcement rules for assuring that all electronic transfers of cash and credit are physically segregated to the extent possible from all gambling areas. And it provides for comparable civil liability as provided elsewhere in TILA and EFTA to permit individuals to file private actions against gambling establishments that violate these restrictions.

Mr. Speaker, the National Commission's report confirms that legalized gambling has become a national phenomenon. While it is unreasonable to think we can stop its growth, we can take reasonable measures to help minimize the potential financial strain and anguish for American families. My legislation does not prohibit casinos, racetracks and other gambling facilities from providing or using credit card, ATM and debit card devices. It merely requires that these devices be used for the purposes they were intended and not to encourage irresponsible or problem gambling.

I believe this is reasonable and worthwhile legislation. I urge its adoption by the Congress.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

DEATH OF HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

HON. BILL LUTHER

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. LUTHER. Mr. Speaker, Congressman George Brown will be sorely missed not only by his constituents in California but also by those of us who had a chance to work with him here in Washington.

George will always be remembered as someone who looked to the future. As a member, and later chairman, of the Science Committee, he showed his devotion to new technology and space exploration. He fought hard for solar energy and fuel alternatives. I had the pleasure of serving on the Committee with him, and I can say I am indebted to him for his responsible, far-sighted leadership.

Equally important, George brought solid values to Washington—devotion, honesty, and hard work. He shunned petty personal attacks and negative political games. His dignity and decency earned him the respect of his colleagues. He leaves a void that will not easily be filled. Thank you George, for setting a high standard for public service in America.

IN MEMORY OF THE HONORABLE GEORGE E. BROWN

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a dedicated public servant and friend of many years, George Brown. We met and began working together in this great body when he joined me here in 1963. Almost from the start, George began following his own path in Congress, but in doing so he served his constituents, country, and friends as well as any Member has served those that they represent.

George was truly an advocate for all people. Even when it was unpopular, he pursued his belief that all people were created equal and he championed the civil rights legislation that transformed America. As a patron of the working men and women of this country, he worked to bring workers protection from hazardous working conditions. And he believed that all citizens should be able visit federal parks. Due in part to this vision, the citizens of this great nation have access to more federal parks than ever before.

With George's passing, this institution and the American people have lost part of their history. George was a repository of institutional knowledge and a person that has contributed greatly to our country as a whole. I know I speak for all of the Members of Congress when I say that this body will miss George Brown. I would also like thank his family and the citizens of the 42nd District of California for sharing him with us for so long.

TRIBUTE TO THE LIFE OF JUDGE FRANK M. JOHNSON, JR.

HON. ROBERT B. ADERHOLT

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. ADERHOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Judge Frank M. Johnson, Jr. a native of my hometown of Haleyville, Alabama. On July 23, 1999, Judge Johnson passed away at the age of 80.

After graduating from the University of Alabama in 1943 at the top of his class, Frank Johnson enlisted in the Army as a private. Soon, he received a commission as an infantry lieutenant. During World War II, he served during the Normandy invasion, and won a Bronze Star as a platoon leader in Gen. Patton's Third Army. Twice he was wounded in battle during the war. After he recovered, he was transferred to England and served out the war as a legal officer in the Judge Advocate General's Corps, eventually being promoted to Captain.

Judge Johnson was first promoted to the bench in 1954, then the youngest serving federal judge in the nation. In 1955, he was elevated to U.S. Middle District Judge in Montgomery, Alabama, and in 1979 he was named to the U.S. Court of Appeals.

His career on the bench was marked by many pivotal rulings. In 1956, in his first major ruling, Judge Johnson joined the majority on a three-judge panel in the case concerning the Rosa Parks case. This decision brought the end of segregated bus systems. With this ruling, Judge Johnson staked his place in the civil rights battle, fighting for equality for all Americans during his judicial career.

Judge Johnson participated in rulings that desegregated all types of public places and services, from schools to museums, from airports to restaurants from libraries to parks. Even in the face of harsh criticism and resistance, Judge Johnson stood firm in his belief in equality and justice for all Americans.

Desegregation was not his only accomplishment in the Civil Rights fight. After finding rampant discrimination against blacks registering to vote, Judge Johnson issued a ruling that became the formula Congress used to ensure voting rights nationwide in the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Also, Judge Johnson was part of a panel that ordered the Alabama State Legislature to draw its district lines by population, not by mere geography. This was the first ruling of its time, and helped ensure that citizens were not disenfranchised simply because they lived in a minority-dominated geographic area.

It was his style to stand firm on what he believed was right, often in the face of intense criticism. Judge Johnson, one of America's most distinguished jurists, is an example of dedication for all Americans. All of America—but especially Alabama—feels the loss of Judge Frank Johnson, and we are thankful for his life of public service.

A TRIBUTE TO GEORGE BROWN

HON. HOWARD L. BERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I take the floor today to bid farewell to a giant in California governance and politics.

George Brown was the epitome of a great public servant. Elected as a spirited anti-war crusader, he never lost his bearings. Although he mellowed with time, he never strayed far from his Quaker roots and his strong principles.

In a recent campaign, George's opponent ran a series of ads called "Guilty as Charged," that accused him of being out of touch—a common theme of challengers. George was not out of touch, but in a very different context, he was indeed "guilty as charged."

George was guilty as charged for tireless work on behalf of those less privileged, against discrimination based on race, sexual orientation or gender; for better education, for the nation's working men and women, for children, for the environment, and always—against weapons of mass destruction, for arms control and for peace.

He will always be remembered as a man of principle, unafraid to stand alone, impervious to pressure. In 1966, George cast the sole vote in the House of Representatives against the Defense Appropriations Bill—his act of defiance against the Vietnam War.

From his time as Mayor of Monterey Park to the California Assembly, to Congress where he served as Chairman and then Ranking Member of the Science Committee, he always held his office in spite of ferocious opposition—simply because he paid close attention to his constituents and won the undying loyalty of a tight, but determined majority. They loved him and they wanted him to represent them.

Gruff, crusty and colorful, no one could turn a phrase just like George. If he disagreed with a proposal, it "bordered on lunacy." He loved the thought that he had become a virtual legend in his own time.

We hope that his family will be comforted by his legacy and by knowing that he was one of a kind and a shining example of integrity and principle. George Brown is simply irreplaceable in this House of Representatives.

SIR ARTHUR GILBERT

HON. BRAD SHERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor an exceptional individual who has made an enormous contribution to the arts. In recognition of his valuable advancement of the arts worldwide, he has been knighted by the Queen of England, a great honor for both him and his wife Lady Marjorie Gilbert. This high distinction is rarely awarded to individuals outside Great Britain. It attests to Sir Gilbert's dignity, personal integrity, and contribution to Western culture. Arthur helped develop Los Angeles then went on to build one of the world's greatest collections of gold and silver art, as well as the world's premier collection of micro-mosaics. Receipt of this Knighthood represents a culmination of years of dedication, hard work, and a love for the arts.

This gentleman epitomizes the twin values of hard work and generosity. Early in his life, he began a successful career in the clothing business. He went on to settle in California where he became an illustrious developer, helping to build a bright future for Californians. However, personal success was not enough, he became not only a generous benefactor of many charities, but started a rich collection of decorative art that combines both history and beauty. Indeed, he has long shared his priceless collections with the public and recently donated it to a museum in England so that the entire world can enjoy these exquisite, and often overlooked, forms of art. Arthur Gilbert has truly worked to turn his personal success into a lasting legacy of art for everyone and has thus brought honor on himself and us all.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to please join me in honoring this man who embodies the diligence and generosity to which we all aspire and whose dedication to the arts serves as an inspiration and a model to us all.

We must support and honor individuals, like Arthur Gilbert, who cultivate artistic enthusiasm, understanding, and appreciation. Through such enterprising and charitable individuals, we are given a glimpse of how bright our future can be. A world filled with the dedication, hard work, altruism, and dignity that his well earned title of knight represent. thanks to Sir Arthur Gilbert's contribution to the arts, we know that the future will be a beautiful one that many future generations can appreciate.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to this October when Buckingham Palace will see the investiture of Sir Arthur Gilbert as a Knight Bachelor. I know that he, and Lady Marjorie Gilbert, will be justly proud.

IN HONOR OF THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, it should be easy to honor someone that you have known for almost 16 years. However, it is difficult to honor every poignant and inspiring memory of him. Sixteen years sounds like a long time of fond memories, but my dear friend and colleague, George Brown, has been making lasting impressions in this country for over 35.

From the depth of issues like fighting discrimination and segregation, to the brink of the AIDS epidemic and continuing world conflicts, George has experienced a changing country and world throughout his time in Congress. However, experiencing change is considerably separate from making change, which George Brown did much of. He has been a part of these changes, and for that reason, we honor him today.

As a college student in the 1930's, Brown began inspiring change when he began to fight for civil rights. At the University of California at Los Angeles, George helped to integrate the campus when he was the first white man to live with an African-American roommate. That strive for change continued as he graduated from UCLA with a degree in Industrial Physics and used it to serve the people of Los Angeles. He was elected to the Monterey Park, CA, city council in 1954 and became mayor of the city in 1955, just one year later. George moved on to the California State Assembly in 1958, where he focused on environmental issues. This drive to fight for the environment stayed with George throughout his entire career, including his 17 terms in Congress.

In 1962, George Brown ran to represent the 29th district in California and won his seat with an 11 percentage point margin. During his years in Congress, Representative Brown voted for the Civil Rights Act of 1964, served on the House Committee on Science as a ranking member, served on the House Committee on Agriculture, worked to integrate technology and education, spoke out on foreign policy issues and fought painstakingly hard to keep the environment safe, clean and healthy.

I would like to praise George Brown for who he was and how he contributed to this society. As a Congressman, as a family man, as an environmentalist and as a citizen, George Brown will be remembered.

THE LATE HON. GEORGE BROWN

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate having this opportunity to say a few words in memory of my friend and colleague George Brown and to reflect on his distinguished service to our nation.

Through his military service in WWII and nearly 35 years in the House of Representatives, George Brown established a record of public service matched by few others. Indeed, he has ennobled our profession through his example.

During his career, George showed himself to be a man of strong moral conviction and uncommon vision. In his early days in Washington, George continued his life-long work as a tireless advocate for racial equality and civil rights.

Later, as Chairman and Ranking Member of the Science Committee, he lent his scientific expertise and steadfast support to issues of science, technology, and aeronautics. He will be best remembered, perhaps, for his dedication to strengthening America's commitment to manned and unmanned space exploration. His efforts in this area have left an indelible mark on our space program, and have quite literally broadened our nation's horizons.

George also recognized the need to conserve our natural resources and protect the environment, long before such issues were part of the mainstream agenda. Time has shown just how right he was.

Throughout his many years in the House, George had a wonderful ability to work with people of all political persuasions. He was always willing to find common ground and form alliances with others, making him an extraordinarily effective advocate for the people of his 42nd District.

George Brown will be remembered as a man who challenged us to make our world a better place, while advocating exploration of worlds beyond our own. He was a great member of this institution. I will miss him. I extend my deepest sympathies to his family.

GEORGE BROWN, CONGRESSIONAL ICON

HON. BRUCE F. VENTO

OF MINNESTOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to add my words of condolences to the family of George Brown, our late colleague. George was a friend and counselor to many members, including myself. He was a real worker and advocate for people in the House. Congressman Brown applied himself and invested himself in the pursuit of good policy, first for the people of this nation and California, and for the attainment of human kind.

Congressman Brown invested the time and energy to understand the intricacies of policy and often we stood up together and spoke for good, sound science as it affected our landscapes and natural resources. The United States Biological Survey, the man in the Biosphere program, and, of course, George Brown had a legacy of accomplishments to match similar efforts related to the National Science Foundation (NSF), NASA, and the Office of Technology Assessment (OTA).

I know that George felt if we had good information as members or as administrators we would be equipped to make the best public policy. George Brown's modest life and background working for a good education, which he obtained and used, says a lot about Representative Brown. George Brown did not forget how he got to where he was and the need to stand up for those without a voice in the political power structure. George Brown worked against housing discrimination, for the right of workers to win representation and fair compensation and eventually was elected to local office and to the United States House where he set off on a great career and journey.

George Brown, plain speaking and modestly attired, possessed the power of ideas and knowledge. Congressman Brown didn't let political expediency interfere with what he thought was the right vote or the correct action. We will miss the warm friendship and special role that George Brown played in Congress on a professional and especially personal basis, but his spirit will live in our actions and memories. George Brown has set a very high mark and we surely stand on this shoulders as we look ahead to and try to see the future and hope for our great nation.

My sympathy to his wonderful wife Marta and to his family, you have our support and comfort. God bless George Brown and thank God for the service of this wonderful man.

IN HONOR OF THE WORLD PEACE BELL AND THE CITY OF NEWPORT, KENTUCKY

HON. KEN LUCAS

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. LUCAS of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the city of Newport, Kentucky, where the World Peace Bell arrived at its permanent home this weekend. At 12 feet in diameter and 12 feet in height, the bell weighs 66,000 pounds. It is the world's largest swinging bell. I also rise to recognize Wayne Carlisle for his vision, commitment, and enthusiasm, without which the World Peace Bell would not have been possible.

The World Peace Bell is a powerful symbol of freedom and peace. It was cast in Nantes, France, on December 11, 1998, the 50th Anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The Bell has an inscription commemorating that document, as well as engravings marking the most important events of the past 1,000 years.

The World Peace Bell was first rung in Nantes on March 20, 1999, in a public ceremony, and it began a month-and-a-half-long sea voyage from France to New Orleans, where the Bell was made part of that city's July Fourth celebration. The Bell was transported by barge up the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers, making stops in 14 cities along the way. The Bell arrived at its final destination on August 1st.

The World Peace Bell will officially open on September 21, 1999, the International Day of Peace, when it will toll to observe the opening session of this year's United Nations General Assembly. On New Year's Eve 1999, the Bell will be rung once every hour and broadcast so that people in every time zone around the globe will hear the new millennium rung in by our World Peace Bell. This celebration will include leaders of church and state from around the world, as well as participants performing native rituals and wearing traditional costumes.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to take this opportunity to congratulate the city of Newport and neighboring river cities on their successful revitalization efforts. The World Peace Bell is only one of a number of projects coming to fruition in the region. The success of these efforts is a testament to the spirit and hard work of the people of Northern Kentucky.

TRIBUTE TO GEORGE BROWN

HON. RON PACKARD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this Opportunity to pay tribute to both a colleague and friend, George Brown.

I had the privilege of serving on the Science Committee during George's tenure as Chairman, and I valued the opportunity to learn from his leadership. George and I worked together on many occasions in support of interests important to our native southern California.

Mr. Speaker, George Brown was an unapologetic liberal, yet that did not stop him from actively working with and befriending Members from the other side of the aisle. In fact, George may forever be remembered for his ability to bring together all Californians serving in Congress. Today, my colleague JERRY LEWIS is doing a remarkable job of leading the California delegation. We should not forget that George Brown began this effort.

In George Brown, this institution has lost a distinguished Member of Congress, a faithful public servant, and a good man. George will be greatly missed, not only as a tireless advocate for the people of California's 42nd Congressional District, but as a close friend to those so fortunate to have known him.

IN HONOR OF THE LATE REP. GEORGE BROWN

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak with fondness about the late Congressman George Brown. His death leaves us with one less person dedicated to the fight for America's future. When I came to Congress to try to end the Vietnam War, George was also fighting against that war. With his leadership, we brought our soldiers home and ended one of the lowest points in American morale and foreign policy. His fight for what was right didn't end with Vietnam. He fought for the environment, for education, and for the underprivileged throughout his career.

One of Representative Brown's legacies is the Environmental Protection Agency. Before George Brown, there was no single entity in government designated to protect American air, water, land, and wildlife. His dedication to protecting our ecosystem helped improve the quality of life for all of us and future generations. George Brown raised environmental activism from a few dedicated scientists to the general public, making the environment an issue and assuring that the government protected it.

Representative Brown interests went beyond preserving the environment for future generation; he cared deeply about the education of our children. George supported the establishment of educational loans. These loans have provided millions of Americans with the opportunity to go to college and contribute more to our society. Recently, he joined in support of building more schools, hiring more teachers, and improving the quality of our classes. He was committed to quality education for our children.

George Brown fought to improve the lives of all Americans. He fought especially hard for those Americans who couldn't fight for themselves. Before coming to Congress, George worked to end anti-union laws and to ban discrimination. Once elected to Congress, he worked to enact the Civil Rights Act to address which discrimination against minorities. He also joined in the fight to improve health care, provide affordable prescription drugs, and even to protect our health care workers from accidental needlesticks.

Congressman George Brown fought for so many things that we now take for granted. George stood up for what was right for our environment, education, and the underprivileged. Beyond all of these accomplishments, he was an example to all of us. He stood up for what he believed in regardless of the potential political fall out. He exemplified the ideals that this country was founded on.

Although George is no longer with us, we will continue to fight to ensure that every American has the same rights, freedoms, and opportunities that some want to reserve for the elite few.

THE LYME DISEASE INITIATIVE OF 1999

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 5, 1999

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing legislation to wage a comprehensive fight against Lyme disease.

This proposal represents the next stage of our campaign to reduce and then eradicate Lyme disease. It is a five year, $125 million blueprint for attacking the disease on every front. In addition to authorizing the necessary resources to wage this war, the bill: (1) makes the development of better detection tests for Lyme the highest priority of Lyme disease research; (2) lays out a lost of vital public health goals for agencies to accomplish, including a 33 percent reduction in Lyme disease within five years of enactment in the 10 highest and most endemic states; (3) fosters better coordination between the scattered Lyme disease programs within the Federal Government through a five-year joint-agency plan so that the left hand knows what the right hand is doing; (4) helps protect federal workers and visitors at federally owned lands in endemic areas through a system of periodic, standardized, and publically accessible Lyme disease risk assessments; (5) requires a review of our system of Lyme disease prevention and surveillance of search for areas of improvement; (6) fosters additional research into other related tick-borne illnesses so that the problem of co-infection can be addressed; (7) initiates a plan to boost public and physician understanding about Lyme disease; and (8) creates a Lyme Disease Task Force to provide the public with the opportunity to hold our public health officials accountable as they accomplish these tasks.

Mr. Speaker, Lyme disease is one of our nation's fastest growing infectious diseases, and the most common tick-borne disease in America. According to some estimates, Lyme disease costs our nation $1 billion to $2 billion in medical costs annually. The number of confirmed cases of Lyme disease was nearly 16,000 last year, an increase of 24.5 percent from the previous year, and that is only the tip of the iceberg. Many experts believe the official statistics understate the true numbers of Lyme disease cases by as much as ten or twelve-fold. Lyme disease is sometimes called the 'Great Pretender' disease because its symptoms so closely mimic other conditions. Thus, it can be easily misdiagnosed. Worse still, our current detection tests are not always reliable and accurate enough to defect the disease in patients.

The Lyme Disease Initiative of 1999 builds on the accomplishments of the legislation introduced in the previous Congress, H.R. 379. As Members may recall, we were successful in getting a portion of that bill enacted as part of the Strom Thurmond National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1999, as well as part of the Fiscal Year 1999 Defense Appropriations bill. The provisions from last year up dedicated up to $3 million in Department of Defense funding dedicated for Lyme and tick-borne disease research, so that our soldiers and their families can be protected when they work and live in areas endemic for Lyme disease. This $3 million in funding was a good start, but there is still so much that remains unknown about Lyme disease.

That is where the new proposal comes in. It is the product of countless meetings with patients and families struggling to cope with this terribly debilitating disease. I cannot tell my colleagues how many times I have met with families who have told me heart breaking stories about how they went from doctor to doctor without getting an accurate diagnosis, getting progressively weaker and sicker, while racking up massive medical bills. Sadly, the lack of physician knowledge about Lyme disease, and the inadequacies of existing laboratory detection tests, compound the misery. Consequently, we have consulted extensively with the organizations representing these patients, as well as with the agencies charged with implementing the new program, to ensure that the bill addresses these very real concerns.

In short, I believe this is a good plan that affirmatively meets the needs of patients, and one that is worthy of my colleagues' support.

THE LYME DISEASE INITIATIVE OF 1999

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE—LYME DISEASE INITIATIVE OF 1999

SECTION 2. FINDINGS

SECTION 3. FIVE YEAR PLAN OF ACTION, PUBLIC HEALTH GOALS

Establishes a Five-Year plan (authorizing $125 million over five years) to reduce the incidence and prevalence of Lyme disease, and requires Secretaries of Health and Human Services, Defense, Agriculture, and Interior to collaborate in creating this five year plan.

Goal No. 1: Direct Direction Tests. The legislation directs federal researchers to make the development of a reliable, reproducible direct detection test for Lyme disease a priority. Without a good detection test, individuals will continue to get misdiagnosed, insurance companies will continue to dispute and deny needed treatments, and patients will not know if they are truly cured of Lyme.

Goal No. 2: Improved Surveillance and Reporting System. Requires a review of the existing reporting system for Lyme, including the surveillance criteria used to determine whether or not a case of Lyme is counted in the state statistics reported to CDC. Requires this review to be inclusive, and obtain the input of health providers, Lyme disease patient advocacy groups, and state and local governments. It also considers the use of a 'dual reporting' system so that valuable data collected on persons who do not meet the surveillance criteria definition of Lyme—but are still being treated for Lyme by their doctor.

Goal No. 3: Lyme Disease Prevention. Requires CDC to establish a baseline rate of Lyme disease in the 10 highest endemic states, and aims for a reduction in this rate of 33 percent within 5 years. Means used to accomplish this goal may include natural and non-pesticidal means to control tick populations, as well as better public education and systematic risk assessments on the risks of Lyme disease on federally owned lands in endemic areas.

Goal No. 4: Prevention of Other Tick-Borne Diseases. Authorizes programs to prevent, and expand research on, other tick-borne infectious diseases. Although Lyme disease cases are the overwhelming majority of all tick-borne infections in the U.S., many Lyme patients are co-infected with other tick-borne diseases.

Goal No. 5: Improved Public and Physician Education. Establishes a multi-departmental program to improve public and health provider awareness of how to prevent Lyme disease, how to diagnose it, and how to treat it.

SECTION 4. LYME DISEASE TASK FORCE

Establishes a joint government/public Lyme Disease Task Force to provide advice to the Secretaries of Agriculture, Health and Human Services, Defense and Interior on achieving the five public health goals.

Public members on the task force will include: (1) Lyme disease research scientists, (2) Lyme disease patient advocacy organizations, (3) clinicians with extensive experience in treating Lyme disease, (4) Lyme disease patients, and/or the parents or family members of those who have had Lyme disease.

SECTION 5. ANNUAL REPORTS

Mandates annual progress reports to Congress so the taxpayers will be able to hold agencies accountable for following through on the five year plan.

SECTION 6. DEFINITIONS

SECTION 7. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Provides $125 million over five years in new authorization to fund this coordinated, multi-agency war on Lyme disease.

$40 million in additional authorization over five years ($8 million/year) for the National Institutes of Health (NIH), most of which will be used to develop and improve direct detection tests for Lyme. This new money, if appropriated, will increase existing NIH Lyme research by approximately 41 percent.

$40 million in additional authorization over five years ($8 million/year) for the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC). This money will be used to review the surveillance criteria, fund tick control and public education initiatives, as well as prevention programs. If enacted and appropriated, CDC resources devoted to Lyme would be doubled under the proposed bill.

$30 million in additional authorization over five years ($6 million/year) for the Department of Defense (DoD). This amount was identified by DoD in its Fiscal Year 1999 report to Congress on Lyme disease as the amount necessary to fund current and future research requirements.

$7.5 million in additional authorization over five years ($1.5 million/year) for the Department of Agriculture to enhance USDA's research capabilities on Lyme. USDA currently is exploring innovative techniques to remove/manage tick populations with minimal pesticide exposure to humans.

$7.5 million in additional authorization over five years ($1.5 million/year) for the Department of Interior. This will be used to improve public awareness and understanding of the risks of Lyme disease at federally owned lands, as well as needed tick control efforts.

State	Total number Lyme cases reported to CDC 1989–1998	Annual incidence per 100,000 persons
